U.S. ANNOUNCES AID FOR RUSSIA; NO INVASION

Small Forces to Help Allies Guard Supply Ports.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—Official statements by the American and Japanese governments, made here tonight, announce that the plans for extending military aid to Russia in Siberia will be undertaken by the United States and Japan alone, with the other allied co-belligerents assenting in principle.

The United States and Japan will each sent "a few thousand men" to Vladivostok to act as a common force in occupying and safeguarding the city and protecting the rear of the westward moving Czecho-Slovak army. The numbers of the American troops, where they will go, and when may not be discussed.

While the United States and Japan are extending aid to the Czecho-Slovak army in Siberia the United States will continue to coöperate with the allies operating from Murmansk and Archangel. To what extent and in what nature is not announced.

Only Two Immediate Objects.

The only present objects of the Japanese-American forces will be to give such aid and protection as is possible to the Czecho-Slovak forces against the armed body of German and Austrian prisoners of war and to steady any efforts at self-government and self-defense in which the Russians themselves may be willing to accept assistance.

Later the United States will send a commission of merchants, agricultural experts, labor advisors, Red Cross representatives, and agents of the Y. M. C. A. to organize some way to meet the economic necessities of the stricken Russian people.

Japan Makes Pledge.

Both the United States and Japan, in the official announcements, make the most specific pledges of the action agreed upon being wholly without thought of interference with the sovereignty of Russia or any interference whatever in her internal affairs.

The Japanese government at the same time pledges itself that when the objects of the mission are accomplished it will withdraw every Japanese soldier and leave the sovereignty of Russia unimpaired in all its phases.

The agreement to which all the allies assent is largely the result of the personal efforts of President Wilson, who has been at work almost unceasingly for weeks to bring the nations together in the most effective plan, which at the same time will convince the Russian people that the aim was purely to help them preserve and develop their new found democracy.

Statement from Government.

The statement in full as to the Washington government's purposes and aims in extending military and economic aid to Russia, issued in the form of a "statement to the press on the American-Japanese action in Siberia," from the acting secretary of state, as follows:

"In the judgment of the government of the United States—a judgment arrived at after repeated and very searching considerations of the whole situation—military intervention in Russia would be more likely to add to the present sad confusion there than to cure it, and would injure Russia rather than help her out of her distresses.

"Such military intervention as has been most frequently proposed, even supposing it to be efficacious in its immediate object of delivering an attack upon Germany from the east, would, in its judgment, be more likely to turn out to be merely a method of making use of Russia than to be a method of serving her.

Must Save Russian People.

Her people, if they profited by it at all, could not profit by it in time to deliver them from their present desperate difficulties, and their substance would meantime be used to maintain foreign armies, not to reconstitute their own or to feed their own men, women, and children.

"We are bending all our energies now to the purpose, the resolute and confident purpose, of winning on the western front, and it would, in the judgment of the government of the

LUDENDORFF AND VON HINDENBURG ADMIT FAILURE

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 3.—Field Marshal von Hindenburg and Gen. Ludendorff received the German correspondents, according to advices reaching here, and openly admitted that this time their strategic plans had failed.

They asserted, however, that the Germans were still masters of the situation and that the territories given to the enemy were thus disposed of according to plans. If the battles were on German territory, they explained, it would be painful to give up villages, but the progress of the enemy, they declared, was without importance and would not affect the result of the world war.

Von Hindenburg said that the German soldiers would become just as easily accustomed to the Americans as they did to the black soldiers.

Four Patients Escape from Dunning Asylum

Four patients at the Chicago State Hospital for the Insane at Dunning escaped yesterday, according to a report made to the Irving Park police by Assistant Superintendent Edward A. Foley. The men walked into the key room, took the key to the front gate, and made off without interference. They are John McCarthy, John Kandy, Charles Moncicki, and George Crubas.

W. H. Luthardt Succeeds Funkhouser for 60 Days

William H. Luthardt, secretary to Acting Chief Alcock, in a special order No. 165, was appointed temporary second deputy to fill for sixty days the vacancy created by the action of the civil service commission, which three days ago discharged Maj. M. L. C. Funkhouser. The appointment was made with the consent of the civil service commission..

POLICE VICE FOE SENT TO 'WOODS'

Traffic Squad and Central Detail Merged in Reorganization.

Lieut. William Shoemaker, "terror" of the vice interests, has been sent "to the woods" and Chicago's traffic division of 450 men has been merged with Central detail in a shakeup ordered last night by Acting Chief Alcock. Five captains and seven lieutenants are shifted, seven patrol sergeants, ten detective sergeants, and thirty-seven patrolmen.

Acting Chief Alcock said the changes were made through developments in the Funkhouser case, with the exception of the case of Capt. W. W. Cudmore, who goes from Summerdale to Irving Park because his health is poor and the work lighter in Irving Park.

Schoemaker "Too Active."

The transfer of Lieut. Schoemaker from the Chicago avenue district to Brighton Park, which latter station is regarded as exile from a police point of view, is said to be directly related to the Alcock-Funkhouser dispute, which resulted in the dismissal of Maj. Funkhouser from the post of second deputy.

Schoemaker was placed in charge of a special vice squad under the direction of the second deputy. He promptly made life so miserable for shady hotel keepers, saloon law violators and disorderly houses that vice became almost extinct in the districts more favored of this traffic.

How Men Are Shifted.

The captains transferred are these:

Capt. James O'Toole from Sheffield to Desplaines.

Capt. Thomas Meagher from Desplaines to West Chicago avenue.

Capt. Cudmore from Summerdale to Irving Park.

To Improve Service.

The change in the traffic division, according to Acting First Deputy Morgan Collins is brought about by a desire to keep men from growing stale from constant service in one post. The merger of the mounted squad and the regular central detail was decided upon in a conference of Acting Chief Alcock, Capt. Collins, Capt. Stephen B. Wood, and members of the Association of Commerce.

Capt. Wood is to be the new commander of central division, and will have charge of the new force of 700 men. For the present the traffic division will maintain headquarters at La Salle and Illinois streets. It is expected that the construction of a new central station will provide quarters for the entire division.

Capt. Collins said that under the new plan it will be possible to detail more men for active duty, keep the crossings better guarded and also provide men for night duty under the new plan of night traffic policemen.

VICTORY HOUR FOR ALLIES HAS STRUCK—HAIG

British Commander Declares Yankees Turned Balance.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Field Marshal Haig, commander in chief of the British forces in France, has issued a special order of the day to the British troops, dated Aug. 4, the anniversary of Great Britain's entry into the war. The order says:

"The conclusion of the fourth year of the war marks the passing of the period of crisis. We can now with added confidence look forward to the future.

"The revolution in Russia set free large hostile forces on the eastern front, which were transferred to the west. It was the enemy's intention to use the great numbers thus created to gain a decisive victory before the arrival of American troops should give superiority to the allies.

U. S. Troops Save Day.

"The enemy made his effort to obtain a decision on the western front and failed. The steady stream of American troops arriving in France has restored the balance. The enemy's first and most powerful blows fell on the British.

"The superiority of force was nearly three to one. Although he succeeded in pressing back parts of the fronts attacked, the British line remained unbroken.

Spirits of Allies High.

"After many days of heroic fighting, the glory of which will live for all time in the history of our race, the enemy is held. At the end of four years of war the magnificent fighting qualities and spirit of our troops remain of the highest order.

"I thank them for the devoted bravery and unshaken resolution with which they responded to my appeal at the height of the struggle. I know they will show like steadfastness and courage in whatever task they may yet be called upon to perform."

Win on 30 Mile Front.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—The allies continued their successful advance today along a front of about thirty miles toward the Vesle river.

They have reached the southern banks of the Aisne and the Vesle, the line extending from Soissons to Fismes, the war office announced tonight. French cavalry patrols now are operating along the railroad between Soissons and Reims.

Menace Foe's Right Wing.

The Germans are retreating north of the Vesle with great precipitation. Great fires are raging in the territory evacuated by the enemy.

The German right wing on the north bank of the Aisne is in a dangerous situation as a result of the French advance to Pommiers, northwest of Soissons, and it is expected that they will be unable to hold their present position.

The British in the Albert sector have recaptured most of the ground previously held by the

SUMMARY OF DAY'S ACHIEVEMENTS

(By the Associated Press.)

The great salient between Soissons and Reims on the Aisne-Marne front, in which terrific fighting has been going on for two weeks, has been virtually flattened out by the allied forces.

French cavalry patrols now are operating along the railroad running between these two cities, constituting the two pivotal points of the previous German advance, American troops hold the outskirts of Fismes, the great supply base of the German army, which the enemy strove with utmost strength and determination to hold, and allied advance guards have reached the southern bank of the Aisne.

The force of the combined thrusts of French, British, and Americans appears great enough now to drive the Germans back even beyond the Aisne to the heights of the Chemin des Dames, where powerful defenses must then be faced.

Both east and west the allies on Saturday increased the speed of their advance, a distance of more than six miles being gained at certain points. The line now has been so straightened as to escape the danger, which previously threatened the southern bend from Soissons, of being enfiladed.

Notwithstanding the difficulties confronting them the allies are bringing up their guns almost as fast as the Germans are withdrawing theirs and all the roads over which the Germans are retiring are being subjected to the heaviest bombardments.

Coincidentally the British have regained important ground west of the Ancre river, where the enemy also is retreating. The German withdrawal across the Ancre river from Albert northward for a distance of more than three miles is considered by London to be an indication that the enemy has abandoned that section of the Picardy battlefield as the scene of offensive operations.

There have been indications that the British may strike the enemy when the moment is ripe. This attack might be launched at several points along the vulnerable sides of the German salients in Picardy and Flanders.

Fleeing Foes Go in Groups from Towns They Had Fired

"Today an extraordinary spectacle meets the eye. The entire German salient line has given way with a snap like that of a string that has broken.

"Yesterday, before the last deluge of rain robed the country with a thick white mist, it was possible actually to observe the German retreat with the naked eye—a thing of extremely rare occurrence. A man could be seen dodging out of a house, with a machine gun over his shoulder, and another loading his mule with ammunition. A third, who seemed to be an officer, was supervising the destruction of some sort of dump.

Flee in Small Groups.

"Small groups, coming out of their billets, formed in the roadway and marched off with their arms at the slope. It was all orderly, though perhaps not as leisurely as it looked. There seemed no suggestion of disorder, still less of rout.

"Yet this sort of thing was happening along the entire forty miles of front between Soissons and Reims.

"There was smoke, indeed. Huge, black, bulging pillars of it, like miraculously created Towers of Babel, suddenly appeared with a thunderous uproar here and there about the sodden landscape as some huge ammunition dump went up to heaven, a splendid sacrifice to the god of battles, and its dark pall spread and sank to the rain swept earth.

Hard Fighting Everywhere.

"Not that there had been no fighting. There had been plenty of fighting—hard fighting—on the round-headed hill between Clerges and Coulonges—fighting that gave every prospect of continuing, when suddenly the tension snapped, and the Germans were in retreat.

"The crushing pressure of Petain's troops about those of the crown prince had been so admirably timed that if the salient had not broken in one place it would have in another. Soissons, for example, the fall of which yesterday came as so joyous a surprise, had been undermined by the most gallant capture of Buxancy by the famous Scottish division on July 30—an exploit that won Gen. Mangin's enthusiastic approval.

Soissons Soon Falls.

"With the enemy's abandonment of the heights above the Crise river Soissons became ripe fruit that might fall at any moment, and although there was fierce fighting by the troops that passed through it yesterday, the mere possession of the town is not of great moment. It is the ground above it which constitutes the pivot of the maneuver which may have vital consequences on the new German line of resistance.

"On the east the salient has been broken also, if not quite so badly.

"Here, as doubtless it will be in England, the supreme questions are: What has brought about the retreat, and what will come of it?

Abandons Vast Stores.

"I regard this last phase of the retreat, as well as its earlier manifestations, as part of a clever and more or less orderly withdrawal to a prepared position, and when that position is reached, we will find further acquisition of ground a very difficult matter.

"I have spoken of the enemy's retreat as orderly, so far as I have seen it, but he is still abandoning vast quantities of ammunition, and he is not burying his dead, or at least he is leaving a great number of them unburied. He may elsewhere be leaving his guns behind, but in front of us he has so few that he ought to be able to make off with them.

"Our line is reported to be everywhere in pursuit, and that has a cheerful sound on this anniversary of our great decision."

U. S. PAYS OFF WAR DEBT TRIFLE OF $64,000,000

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—The last of the Spanish war debt was paid off today by the redemption of $64,000,000 worth of bonds, part of a block of $198,000,000 issued June 13, 1898, seven weeks after war was declared.

So great are the nation's expenditures in these days of big scale warfare, that the payment created hardly a noticeable reduction in the treasury's $1,500,000,000 working balance.

The entire Spanish war cost was $1,900,000,000, spread over two years. The present war costs the government $1,600,000,000 a month.

FRANCE GIVES GREAT HONORS TO PERSHING

PARIS, Aug. 3.—Gen. John J. Pershing, commander in chief of the American expeditionary forces in France, was today awarded the grand cross of the Legion of Honor by the French government.

Premier Clemenceau sent the following telegram to Gen. Pershing:

"I take great pleasure in informing you, my dear general, that the government of the French republic has decided to confer upon you the dignity of the grand cross of the Legion of Honor.

"France shall never forget that it was at a moment when the struggle was most bitter that your splendid troops came to add their efforts to ours."

New York, Aug. 3.—[Special.]—The condition of Anna Held was tonight reported to be so precarious her death might occur at any hour.

YANKS ENTER FISMES, GREAT GERMAN BASE

BULLETIN.

WITH THE AMERICANS IN FRANCE, Aug. 3, night.—(By United Press.)—A heavy gas shell attack was launched this morning in the north Toul sector by American forces. Several tons of gas projectiles were hurled into the German lines. The German casualties evidently were serious.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY ON THE AISNE-MARNE FRONT, Aug. 3, 10 p. m.—(By the Associated Press.)—American troops entered the southern part of Fismes today, while other forces of the allies hold the southern banks of the Aisne and Vesle rivers from Soissons to Fismes.

Eastward it is almost a straight line through Courville, Branscourt, Courcelles, and Champigny.

The advance of the whole army was along a front of almost forty-five miles.

Capture 50 Towns.

To the east of Soissons the extension of the line northward along the Aisne, as well as the extension of the general line, makes it probable, in the opinion of military experts, that the Germans will hesitate before concentrating themselves for a stand along the plateau to the east between the Aisne and the Vesle, as the branch railroad from Sermoise to the north now is dominated by the allied guns.

The broad field covered by the advance today includes at least fifty small towns and villages.

Fismes Is Burning.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—American troops hold the outskirts of Fismes, the great German base in the center of the Aisne-Marne salient, according to the war office announcement tonight.

Great fires lighted up Fismes as the Americans advanced.

There were repeated explosions—the Germans striving to destroy their supplies, while rear guard troops fought desperately to hold back the Americans.

Many Towns Captured.

American artillery kept close behind the infantry, combing the roads over which the Germans were retreating.

Cohan and other towns and villages in the district fell rapidly into the hands of the Yankees.

[Cohan, six miles east and slightly north of Fere-en-Tardenois is a mile north of Coulonges, the last village officially announced as captured in that district.]

Germans Run Faster.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES IN FRANCE, Aug. 3.—Noon—(By the United Press.)—The German retreat has become so rapid that no contact has been reported with the enemy in the last several hours, except isolated rear guard actions.

Great numbers of additional prisoners and machine guns taken have not been counted.

German dead fairly carpet the region through which the Americans are advancing. In addition, carefully laid out Boche cemeteries are encountered in the fields and beside the roads on every hand.

Rapid giving way of the Boches followed bitter fighting along the line of Seringes, Sergy, and Clerges. There was no denying the offensive spirit of the Americans in that region.

The Germans made every effort to hold, not only by throwing in their best troops, but by making great preparations for defense of the forests of Nesles, Fere, and other woods in that region.

Big ammunition dumps were captured there, the Boches having no opportunity to destroy them. The enemy also built extensive dugouts and trench systems, and stretched great quantities of barbed wire.

Cut Up Prussian Guard.

The Prussian Guards and other divisions were cut to pieces by the ferocity of the American attack. Roads, fields, and woods are littered with enemy dead.

American artillery destroyed great numbers of machine gun nests in the woods. Those remaining continued to fire until the doughboys rushed them. Then would come a further uninterrupted advance until the next bunch of machine guns was encountered.

The Americans swung across the fields in open lines, through woods and along the roads in the highest spirits. Some men who had become separated from their own units and had been fighting with others for two or three days sighted their own outfits on the road and yelled, "Well, so long; here's my outfit," and joined up with their own unit again.

Meantime, unceasing rain poured down on the boys, who had been fighting constantly without rest and snatching a bite to eat at irregular intervals. They laughed it off.

Stray prisoners were picked up here and there and were sent back to the rear, along with captured machine guns.

The doughboys continued to trudge through the mud and water. Wagons carrying guns, ammunition, and rations followed in their wake. By noon all the roads the Boches had held in the morning were jammed with every sort of army conveyance.

Germans Lose Engines.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY ON THE AISNE-MARNE FRONT, Aug. 3, morning.—[By the Associated Press.]—Before evacuating Saponay, the Germans desperately endeavored to remove several locomotives and railway cars, which, finally, they were compelled to leave behind. The French and American heavy guns previously had severed the railway running north from Saponay and the Germans were unable to make repairs, owing to the continued shelling.

Saponay and the district extending to Fere-en-Tardenois form an important railway center, of which the Germans made much use until the allied guns cut the line.

When the French entered Saponay on Friday, they found two locomotives which the Germans had attempted to destroy when they discovered that the railroad had been severed, and the railroad yards also had been damaged by German explosives.

Begin Restoring Village.

Friday was the first day Fere-en-Tardenois was not under the German artillery since the Germans evacuated the village. The French and Americans already have started to restore the shell swept village. A group of American engineers under a lieutenant from North Carolina today worked side by side with French engineers, repairing the roads and streets, and other detachments were busy burying the German dead.

Previous to evacuating Fere-en-Tardenois the Germans destroyed virtually everything which could be made use of, including mirrors, beds, and furniture. There was not a single house which had not been shelled or dynamited.

Most of the stone houses are mere shells, with gaping holes in the roofs and sides. Some houses were totally demolished and the church stands with many large holes in the roof and sides. Virtually the only things in Fere-en-Tardenois that are nearly intact are the weathercock on the church steeple and the cobblestones of the streets.

Trees Look Like Cyclone Victims.

The trees in the village square were twisted as if by a cyclone by the farewell shells of the Germans.

A large sign in German at the entrance of the church reads: "Remove hats upon entering." Down the street a German sign, stretched across the roadway, reads: "Captured arms and loot must be stored here." The sign bears a hand pointing to where a house once stood. This building now is a mass of ruins, the result of dynamite or some other explosive used by the retreating Germans.

Dead Litter Roadways.

From Fere-en-Tardenois a valley stretches northwest to Saponay and beyond, and this valley on Friday was a great battlefield. At one place near Saponay, at a crossroad, lay five saddled horses, apparently killed by the same shell. Beside two of the horses lay dead Germans, just as they fell from their saddles.

The roadways are littered with ammunition, wagons and dead horses, some of them with their drivers, as they fell when struck by the big shells of the Franco-American allies. Many of the wheat fields are partly harvested with the wheat stacked, the Germans having reaped what the French peasants had planted.

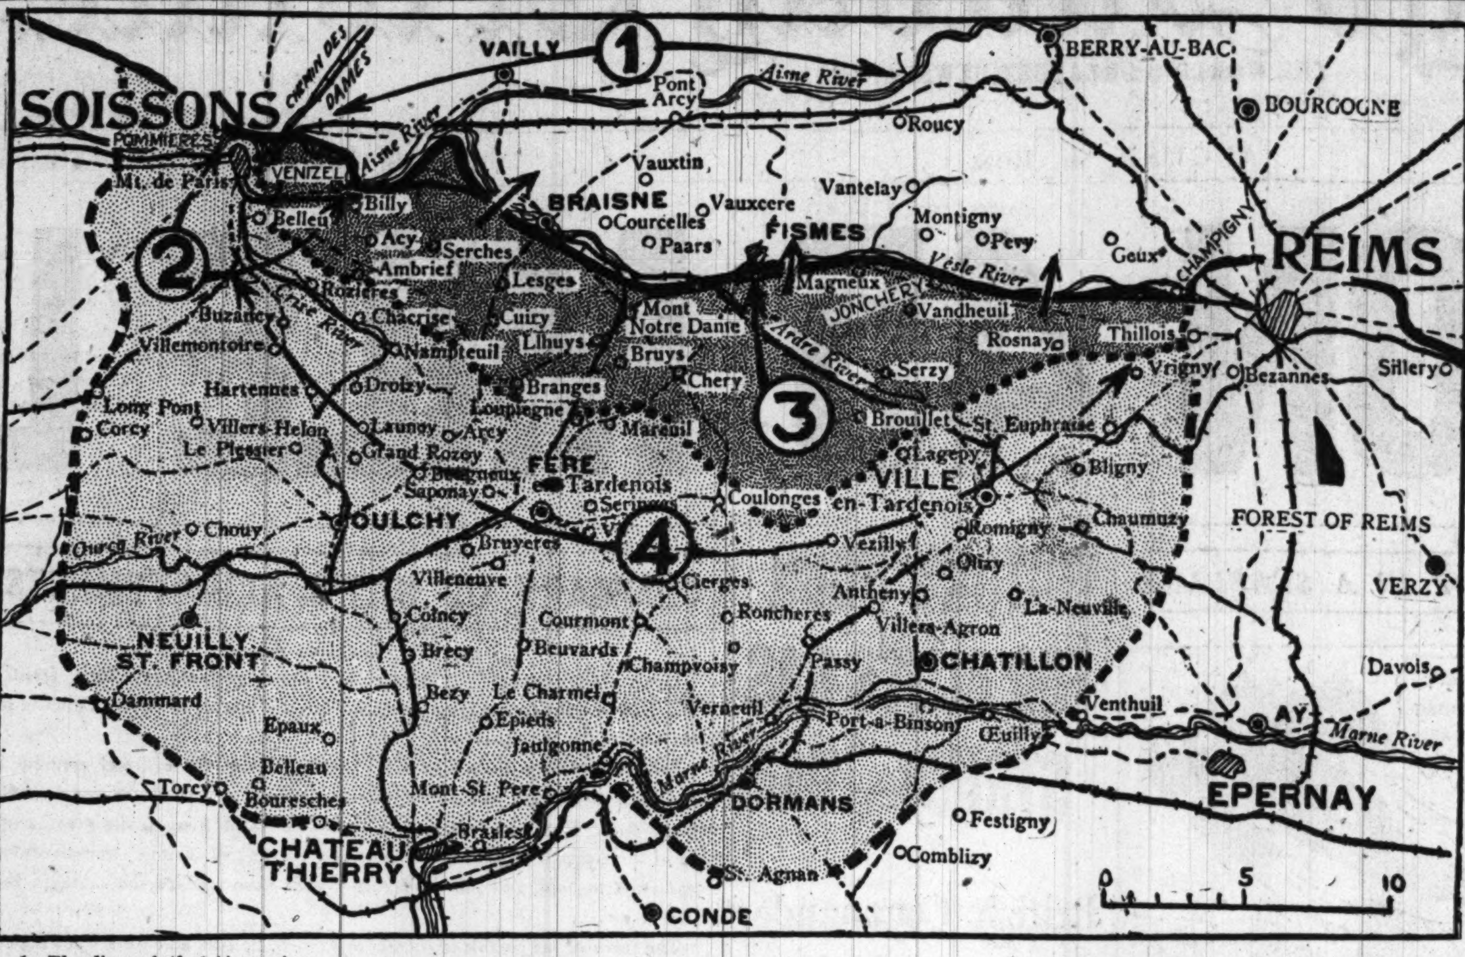
Here and there dots can be seen from the roadway, indicating where some German dropped. At one place a German killed by shrapnel had fallen head first into a shell hole filled by a downpour of rain.

A Valley of Death.

It was into this valley of death that the French infantry came Friday morning as the Germans withdrew through the valley north of Saponay. The French and American shells followed the Germans as they went. From the hill to the west and northwest of Saponay the French came from woods in a rainstorm from clouds so low that the treetops and clouds seemed to meet, and under their barrage they marched into Saponay.

To the northeast the Americans are advancing, virtually under the same conditions, to the woods east of the forest of Nesles and to the valley running north of Saponay. It was here that the French and Americans met and side by side continued their progress northward.

GERMANS RETREAT NORTH OF VESLE TOWARD THE AISNE



1—The line of the Aisne river, to which the crown prince's armies are believed to be retreating.

2—Advance of French troops to Pommiers, northwest of Soissons and, to the Aisne, between Soissons and Venizel, threatens the German positions on the western flank of the Chemin des Dames.

3—American troops are reported in Fismes, north of the Vesle river.

4—The allies have reached the entire river line from Soissons to Reims, the German retreat continuing northward toward the line of the Aisne.

VICTORY HOUR FOR ALLIES HAS STRUCK.—HAIG

Yankees Turned Balance, British Commander Says.

Germans west of the Ancre, according to word from Field Marshal Haig's headquarters tonight. Numerous German attacks have been repulsed.

The Germans are retiring to the east bank of the Ancre. This is evidently an attempt to shorten their lines, made necessary by the withdrawal of reserves from the Picardy region in order to save the crown prince's army.

Begin Crossing Vesle.

The allied troops captured several fords across the Vesle river and immediately began throwing troops across. The Germans evidently had lost all hope of making a stand on the Vesle and fought only severe rear guard actions while falling back toward the Aisne.

French troops have already reached the Aisne between Soissons and Venizel and now threaten the heights at the western end of the Chemin des Dames.

Capture Many in Soissons

Many prisoners were taken by the French at Soissons, which was occupied at 5 o'clock last evening, one hour after the Germans had been driven from the suburbs. Those of the garrison not captured escaped by fleeing northward.

Appearances are that the enemy did not expect to be chased from Soissons. There were no indications that preparations had been made for retirement and no fires were discovered anywhere.

On the left on Friday French cavalry and tanks kept in close pursuit of the enemy and inflicted heavy losses.

In Full Retreat.

WITH THE FRENCH ON THE AISNE-MARNE FRONT, Aug. 3, afternoon.—[Havas Agency.]—The army of the German crown prince continues in full retreat.

The Germans have no heavy artillery in action. They evidently foresaw that their positions were untenable.

The German losses have been heavy.

Reach Banks of Aisne.

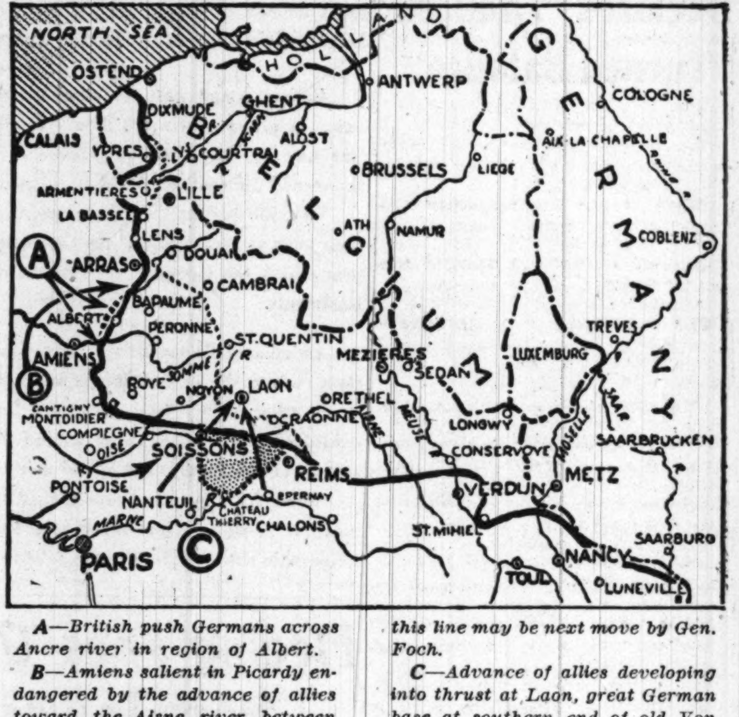
The allied advance along the Soissons-Reims front continued throughout last night and this morning. The banks of the Aisne have been reached along the front from Pommiers, west of Soissons, to Venizel, on the east of that town. Farther east the allies have reached the district of Serches, Vouvrelles, and Cerseuil.

Cavalry patrols have arrived at the River Vesle in the vicinity of Champigny and Jonchery, finding all the bridges cut or burned by the Germans.

Close In on Reims Road.

Just west of Reims the allies have reached or are approaching Tinquex, Thillois, Gueux, and Rosnay, all lying in the neighborhood of the main road from Rouen to Reims.

Fires are illuminating the skies everywhere, the enemy burning everything as he retreats. More than forty conflagrations were counted during the night.



A—British push Germans across Ancre river in region of Albert.

B—Amiens salient in Picardy endangered by the advance of allies toward the Aisne river between Soissons and Reims. Smashing this line may be next move by Gen. Foch.

AUSTRIANS CALL WILSON 'CZAR'; SAY HE PROLONGS WAR

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—[Special.]—The president of the United States is now called "Czar Wilson" in Vienna. The Austrian press, imitating German journalism, by sarcastically declaring the American executive to be the master of the allies, is seeking to prejudice the triple entente against the United States, according to an official French telegram, which says:

"The events of this war have proved that the Austrian government is nothing but an annex and vassal of Germany. It was the docile instrument of the latter in 1914 in the plot against the peace of the world, and since then it has given itself completely to Germany.

"This is doubtless why the press of Vienna is trying to imitate the methods of the German press. It thinks it is doing a clever thing in trying to excite one of the allies against another by articles which are above all ridiculous for their clumsy falsification of the truth. Thus the Neue Freie Presse makes the following reflections on the military events:

"'If the central powers and the entente were the only ones to decide, the two groups of powers would, perhaps, consider that the time had come to let diplomacy intervene, since both parties have this year experienced common hours of joy and suffering. But the French and the English are no longer independent; it is Czar Wilson who clothes them, feeds, them, gives them men and money; it is Wilson who constitutes an obstacle to peace.'"

British Casualties of the Week, 11,240

FRENCH GENERAL IN U. S. PRAISES VALOR OF YANKS

New York, Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Gen. Paul Pau, who commanded at Belfort at the start of the war and smashed the first invasion into Alsace, landed at an Atlantic port today.

"My greetings to the people of the United States cannot express in words my feelings of gratitude and admiration," the general said. "I have been in close contact with your troops and my admiration for them as soldiers is boundless. The work they have done is really wonderful. It is astounding. I have been greatly impressed with the efficiency of your officers and the bravery of your men."

Gen. Pau, with other members of a French economic mission, is en route for Australia to discuss the economic policy to be followed after the war.

"Until your Americans came to France," M. Matin, a member of the commission, said, "we thought our 'Blue Devils' held the palm for fighting, but now even they are happy to yield first place to the 'Terrible Americans.'"

The mission will pay its respects to President Wilson before continuing its journey.

North Shore Women to Entertain 1,000 Jackies

More than 1,000 men in uniform will be guests at dinner today in the homes of women of the north shore suburbs on the occasion of a field meet and vaudeville entertainment in Ravinia park under the auspices of the war recreation committee of the Ravinia club. Yesterday there were sports and drills and a ball game. More than 14,000 dinners have been served thus far by the north shore women in entertaining the soldiers and sailors.

Australia Has Shipped 321,000 Men to Front

Vancouver, B. C., Aug. 3.—Up to date Australia has sent 321,000 men to the fighting front, according to a special to the Vancouver World from Sydney, N. S. W.

NUTCRACKER FOR AMIENS SALIENT NEXT? HUN CRISIS

THE retreat of the Germans northward to the Aisne with the allies pressing toward Laon, the southern base of the famous old Von Hindenburg line presents a new crisis to the Germans on the western front.

The Germans' great salient through Picardy aimed at Amiens and swinging around Montdidier, Noyon, and across the valleys of the Oise and Aisne rivers to the present battle line, is now in imminent danger of heavy and successful attacks by Gen. Foch. It was to relieve this menace that the advance across the Chemin des Dames and the Aisne was launched after the first great German offensive had carried almost to Amiens. But that was before the offensive had passed to the allies and before the Americans had reached the battle front in sufficient numbers to turn the balance of man power against Von Hindenburg.

Under existing conditions the Amiens salient presents a far more critical situation to the German high command than before the ill fated Marne advance was attempted by the crown prince. Their armies up to that time were unbeaten and had not suffered the heavy losses sustained since July 15. The morale of their troops was at its highest. Their crack Prussian guard and Bavarian divisions had not been shattered by the Americans.

Now it is for Foch to say where the battles shall be fought. By his masterful maneuvering he has used up a great part of the kaiser's reserves while husbanding his own.

He has a reorganized and an impatient British army harassing the Germans from Ypres to the Ancre river. Already they have pushed the Boche across this stream in the region of Albert and this may be the forerunner of a smash in force on the northwestern flank of the Amiens salient. With pressure at this point developed into an advance in force and the present offensive smashing at the approaches of Laon, it would seem that nothing but a big retirement could save Von Hindenburg from grave disaster.

Should Foch decide to unleash Gen. Haig's divisions down the Somme valley while the French advance astride the valley of the Oise on the southern front of the salient, enlarging the present battle to the west, the Germans would be faced with the same dangers that pinched them out of the Marne pocket—and on a much enlarged and more decisive scale.

The situation is fraught with the most stupendous possibilities, and, without a wish to be overoptimistic, it looks as if the decisive moment for which Foch has been maneuverlug may be near at hand—the opening for an allied drive that may bring about the flight of the invading Hun back to his own borders.

Herbert Hoover Periled by German Airman's Bomb

PARIS, Aug. 3.—It was reported here that Herbert Hoover, American food administrator, and his party had a narrow escape in a German air raid on Boulogne when a bomb blew in the windows of their private car.

CROWN PRINCE FACES FLIGHT TO 'ROAD OF LADIES'

Crumbling of Pivot of the German Army Forces Vast Retreat.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—The latest news from the Soissons-Reims front shows the entente allied victory is growing swiftly in magnitude. It is significant that Paris refrains from exultation, but watches with feverish interest for every scrap of news, having learned that the progress of events is always ahead of the conservative official communications.

Particular significance is attributed by commentators to the crumbling of the right pivot of the German positions in the region of Soissons, which opens up great possibilities and provokes speculation as to where the Germans will be able to reorganize their defenses.

Expect Big Retirement.

The comment generally dwells on the fact that this is a real entente victory for the French and Scotch forces under Gen. Mangin, with Americans under Gen. de Goutte, and with English and French troops under Gen. Berthelot.

Military critics now look for the retirement of the German crown prince to the Chemin-des-Dames, where he probably will endeavor to reëstablish his line.

The victory, according to the Petit Parisien, will be a disenchantment to the German people, while the Gaulois says that Gen. Ludendorff and the German crown prince must now renounce forever their vast conception of a strategic and dashing success.

London Press Elated.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The advance of the entire allied line in the Soissons-Reims salient is commented on here with elation, although not without reminders that the allies yet have a long way to go. Officialism and other dispatches are regarded as revealing a transformed situation coinciding with the arrival of American detachments so strong as to give the allies a numerical advantage in reserves and justifying high hope for the future.

The altered situation is attributed to two main factors—namely: that the American strength is beginning to tell with great effect and that the allies are reaping an increasing advantage from unity of command.

Laud Gen. Foch.

Gen. Foch's skill receives many tributes, but none warmer than that given in a speech at Belfast by Viscount French, former British commander in France, who describes Gen. Foch as the finest soldier the war had produced, adding:

"He has given an exhibition of military genius which probably will cause his name to rank in history among those of the world's greatest commanders."

The newspapers devote much space to the anniversary of Great Britain's entry into the war and the preparations for the services for commemoration and intercession on Sunday for which the immediate outlook on the front has furnished a setting of hopeful confidence that a little while ago would have seemed much too sanguine.

America's Rise Notable.

Commenting on the anniversary the Times says:

"We are passing through a period of upheaval which may be more pregnant with good or evil than the French revolution, the rise of Islam, or the downfall of the Roman empire. . . . The new leaven is working in all allied democracies and toward similar results.

"In America the results have been the clearest and most immediate. Her people have risen to the height of her destinies and in so rising have realized for themselves that Germany has made them a nation as she had made us an empire, in a truer and larger sense than before.

"The development of a new sense of America's duty to humanity in the mind and conscience of her people has been immeasurably the most momentous event of the fourth year of the war and may be, by far, the most momentous of our times."

Gen. Gorgas Asks 1,000 Red Cross Nurses a Week

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—An urgent call to the American Red Cross to enroll 1,000 nurses a week for the next two months for immediate duty with the army nurse corps was issued today by Surgeon General Gorgas. With the American armies overseas entering more and more into the fighting, the surgeon general said, the need for additional nurses becomes imperative.

FIGHT TO SAVE ALL, EVEN HUNS, FROM AUTOCRACY

Allies Will Win Despite Errors of the Last Four Years, Writer Says.

BY ARNOLD BENNETT.

Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Yes, of course, you will say, "He is going to give us the unusual anniversary stuff about war and it will be tedious and hollow." I doubt if I am going to give you the usual anniversary stuff. I may be tedious but I will not be insincere.

As a fact, the usual anniversary stuff about war improves each year. It improves because in the early years of the war we learned small lessons, lessons about details. In the later years we are learning the greater lessons, the lessons about principles. Also we slowly acquire the excellent if painful habit of looking facts in the fact and as years pass there are more and more facts to look in the face.

The perspective of facts is longer and our judgment is accordingly truer. We now can see that some of the things we have done are more marvelous than we had thought; indeed, it cannot be denied that we have done things which four years ago everybody would have said to be ridiculously impossible.

Grit and Valor Shown.

Grit and tenacity we expected from ourselves. They have been displayed in the fullest degree. Valor we expected from soldiers of a race which frightened Napoleon. It has been displayed in the fullest degree. But did we expect ourselves the remarkable achievements of organization? I do not think so.

We were regarded and we regarded ourselves as "muddlers"; as exemplars of the art, of which any race might be proud. And the creation of our new armies whatever its terrible faults amounts to the most stupendous organizing achievement in history as history will later admit "getting there" by devious and unplanned routes.

Yet on a whole we have organized well and some of our achievements in this line—for instance certain big railway transportation jobs behind the front and the food job at home—have unquestionably proved the existence in us of the faculty for organization.

Disprove Slacker Charge.

Again did we expect from ourselves intense industry? We had decided, or a few journalists had decided for us, that we were slackers, whose moral stamina had been undermined by prosperity, that we were incapable of intense effort sustained over a long period. We have handsomely disproved that theory.

We have worked tremendously and continuously. Idleness which once was glory has become reproach, and we are working now as hard as ever. We worked perhaps harder and our women, though I maintain that they ought to be doing more than they are doing, have assuredly surpassed the record of women of any other free nation.

There remains the financial side, which possibly is most astonishing of all in the matter of taxation for war purposes. No other country can yet compare with us and citizens of no free nation have ever imposed on themselves burdens at all comparable to those which we quite willingly and eagerly have set ourselves to bear.

Why Britain "Muddled."

I admit that the debit side of the account is heavy, but I think that all items in it, beyond those which are due to common defects and weaknesses of human nature, can be traced to one general cause—our extraordinary conservatism, our traditionalism, our exaggerated respect for vested interests, and our profound snobbishness, all of which things spring from the same instinct.

It is the verdict of the world that we have not made the best use of our military material (and in the term military I include the word naval). We have in fact wasted a good deal of it, and the reason is caste feeling and obstinate traditionalism.

Of those who have handled and still handle our military material—I will not pursue this subject, but I am ready to assert that my feelings about it are shared by the thinking rank and file everywhere, and even in political regions. They are devotedly patriotic, they are underpaid, and they do not hanker after gain. They have toiled prodigiously.

Obstinacy Is Fault.

Ignorance, unwillingness to learn, lack of imagination, and obstinate reactionarism are their faults, and grave enough. The same backward, antidemocratic, and unprogressive spirit has appeared in the management of those political problems which have fallen specially to old fashioned departments of the government.

The Russian revolution might have been a source of strength to the allies. It was turned into one of disaster for the allies.

Irish sentiment also might have been a source of strength to the allies, and at first it was a source of strength; but by the grossest, blindest mishandling it was turned not into disaster but unquestionably into a very serious source of weakness.

Nearly all our labor troubles have been due to the same species of error—namely, anti-democratic distrust of the mass of the people. Will this immense error of tendency in high quarters be cured or appreciably mitigated during the course of the war? I do not think it will. The matter has gone too far. The war is too far advanced. The end of the struggle is relatively too near now.

Will Win Despite Errors.

We shall have to win and we shall win in spite of frightful and costly error. I am, however, not out of praise for democracy at the expense of autocracy and I should like with the utmost emphasis to point out one thing against democracy which is far plainer on this anniversary of the declaration of war than it ever was on any previous anniversary. Democracy has not yet realized just what we are fighting for.

You exclaim: "What do you accuse us of, not realizing what we are fighting for? Are we not fighting for the defeat of Prussia and are we not as completely determined today to defeat Prussia as we were this day four years ago?"

I agree and I am convinced that the certitude of smashing Prussia was never so clear as it is at this moment. Prussia, or that which stands for Prussia, is speedily doomed and nothing but some prodigious political mistake on the part of the allies can save those damnable war lords from the fate which they deserve.

Now Sure of Victory.

Even the few among us who at times lacked faith in the triumph of the allied cause have found faith now and you can see them strutting about as bravely as though they had never shaken their heads in ghastly apprehension of failure.

But the extinction of Prussian militarism is the only means to the mighty end for which we are fighting, and, if we mistake that extinction for the end in itself, we are undone. We have to destroy Prussian militarism, simply because it is an obstacle in the path of human progress. If we destroy it and then wander away from the true path of human progress we might as well never have taken the trouble to destroy it or paid the price of destroying it.

You say "Well, we are fighting for a league of nations to prevent future wars." So we are, but a league of nations, however ably constituted, can be nothing unless it is the expression of a new spirit upon earth. That new spirit is the sole reality for which we are fighting, and we have to realize this always and strive night and day to realize it more deeply.

Trust Food of Democracy.

We want democracy, but democracy can only prosper in an atmosphere of mutual trust, an atmosphere from which suspicion and determination to get the better of everybody else at any cost are absent. The root of democracy is a large and kindly faith in human nature. It involves good will, it involves what Stevenson called "Fundamental Decency."

It means that international relations shall be put upon the same basis and be governed by the same moral code as family relations and neighborly relations. Imagine a village in which every villager suspected every other villager, imagine a household in which every member stuck a wardrobe in front of the door of his private room and glanced frowningly and fearfully out upon the passages.

That is a picture of the village and the household of nations in the past and it will be a picture true also of the future unless we realize what is the supreme aim of this war. Democracy means the application of the Sermon on the Mount.

Democracy Must Reign.

To international life democracy means victory, not only over Prussian militarism, but over ourselves. And let me add that true democracy cannot effectively reign over a part of the earth. The earth is too small for such an arrangement.

Democracy must reign over all the earth or it will not reign at all. It must reign over Germany or it is defeated. It cannot reign over Germany until Prussian junkers are utterly discredited and fallen—hence, we are fighting Prussian junkers.

If we have decisively broken junkers we say to the whole of Germany, "You are pariahs, keep yourselves to yourselves," we are stultifying our own democracy and preparing a new hell for ourselves.

The world is not forced to live with loathsome Prussian autocracy, but this world will be forced to live with Germans. Germany is a fact which nothing can do away with.

When Prussian autocracy is smashed you will see whether all Germans are alike, you will see such disclosure of feeling in Germany as the world has never yet seen, and even if all Germans were alike Germany still stands as a member of the world household.

EVANSTON FILLS ITS "MELTING POT"

Evanston's "melting pot" is on the fire. Commencing yesterday morning at 10 o'clock, a steady stream of persons appeared in Fountain square with silver and gold trinkets of all kinds and exchanged them for war savings stamps.

Two tents are pitched in the center of the square, one for the three silversmiths, the other for the committee on war savings. First one goes to the silversmiths, where the goods are appraised, then to the other tent, where the stamps are given.

Already, according to Mrs. R. D. Cunningham, chairman of the committee on war savings, $300 and three clothesbaskets of gold and silver have been left.

Among the silver offerings were two dozen spoons, souvenirs of a trip made through Germany some years ago by Mrs. David Beaton Jr., 628 Colfax street.

Others who brought offerings were Mrs. Violet Patten Wheeler, Mrs. H. F. Hunter, Mrs. J. F. Burns, and Mrs. Clinton L. Day. One jackie, Jack Lowry, was among the contributors. Those who aided the work included Miss Perene Prince and Mrs. David Beaton.

BATTLE STATEMENTS

FRENCH REPORT.

PARIS, Aug. 3.—Tonight's war office statement reads:

During the course of the day our troops, driving back the enemy rear guards, continued their victorious march on a front of about fifty kilometers in the direction of the Vesle river.

On our left our line extends along the southern banks of the Aisne and the Vesle, from Soissons as far as Fismes, the outskirts of which the Americans hold.

East of Fismes we have reached a general line north of Courville, Branscourt, Courcelles and Champigny.

Our cavalry patrols are operating along the railroad between Soissons and Reims.

Our progress at certain points since yesterday exceeds ten kilometers. More than fifty villages have been delivered on this day alone.

The earlier statement follows:

During the night the French troops continued their advance toward the Vesle. On the left the French reached the Aisne between Soissons and Venizel.

BRITISH REPORT.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The war office issued this statement tonight:

The progress made by our patrols in the Albert sector has been continued, and the greater part of the ground previously held by the enemy west of the Ancre river now is in our possession. Our troops followed closely upon the enemy in his withdrawal, indications of which had previously been observed, and a number of his dead have been found in his abandoned trenches.

Early this morning strong hostile raiding parties, after an artillery and trench mortar bombardment, attacked our line southeast of Hebuterne, but were completely repulsed. Another hostile raiding party was dispersed by machine gun fire this morning east of Robecq.

The hostile artillery has shown increased activity in the Kemmel sector.

Field Marshal Haig's earlier report said:

Our patrols brought in a few prisoners last night in the Locre sector.

Today further prisoners were captured by us as the result of a successful raid carried out east of Dickebusch lake. Hostile artillery has shown some activity north of Bethune.

GERMAN REPORT.

BERLIN, via London, Aug. 3.—The German war office issued this statement today:

Southwest of Ypres we beat off a strong British partial attack yesterday morning.

The great successes of the army of Gen. von Boehn in the battle of Aug. 1 contributed to the complete success of the movements carried out yesterday.

The enemy artillery fire was directed on our old fighting zone till early morning, and at isolated points even up to 11 a. m. His infantry and cavalry detachments only followed hesitatingly and cautiously our forefield troops, who were slowly withdrawing.

We inflicted considerable losses on the enemy in minor engagements.

OLD 7TH ILLINOIS NOW IN FIGHTING, LETTER SHOWS

The old Seventh Illinois infantry, now the One Hundred and Eighth trains, has received its baptism of fire in France, as indicated by a letter to a member of THE TRIBUNE staff from Corporal Sheldon Gauvreau, a member of Company P, One Hundred and Eighth military police. They apparently took part in the attack July 4 with the Australians, in which large numbers of Germans and much war material were captured. He says the people at home, especially the mothers, fathers, wives, sweethearts, brothers, and sisters, should be proud of what the Americans are doing over there.

"Our boys have been over and came back with most of the German army and their supplies," he said. "Every one has German souvenirs—rifles, pistols, helmets, etc. The general commanding the Australian forces congratulated our general for the splendid work of his men. Our boys were with the Australians, and they are next to our army in qualification. They fear nothing.

"I really cannot see how Germany can hold out. The prisoners taken were mostly boys from 13 to 16 years old and men of 60 and over. When the boys went over the Germans just threw up their hands and cried, 'Mercy, kamerad, mercy!' Some of the German prisoners were former residents of Chicago and other points in Illinois."

NEW WAR BOARD TO HOLD PUBLIC'S PURSE STRINGS

Economy Body Will Have Last Word on How Money Is Spent.

Chicago will start tomorrow morning on a program of commercial economy for the duration of the war. A new war administration, which it is expected will be on equal terms with the food and the coal administrations, will get into action. It is called the commercial economy administration and Louis M. Stumer has been appointed by the State Council of Defense administrator for Illinois. Similar organizations are to be started in every state and the head of the commercial economy section of the war industries board is to be national administrator.

Much luxury, waste, and inefficiency is to be cut out of Chicago's business and loop life. The administration will have large powers.

It will have the last word on all public improvements. That will include the boulevard link, paving of streets, and building of roads throughout the state. Another important function will be to pass upon matters of building construction. The building of factories, hotels, and even houses must have the approval of the administration.

To Release Man Power.

The big object of the work is to release man power for necessary war work, to eliminate waste of money, equipment, and labor, and to save fuel and transportation.

Many of the little antebellum luxuries will soon be no more. For instance, it is expected that loop restaurants will emulate the Sunday school picnic in the matter of napkins. It is planned to supplant linen with paper. Another proposal is to eliminate all "orchestral din." Restaurant musicians will have to seek other employment.

It is even reported that thousands of men will be released for war work by taking off all salesmen from wholesale and jobbing concerns. Commercial houses will be asked to carry on their business largely by mail and advertising. Not only will man power be released, but considerable railroad passenger traffic will be eliminated.

Restriction of retail delivery systems will be carried even further than it has. Another proposal is to establish self-serving departments in dry goods and other retail stores, based on the cafeteria system. For the present, the elimination of the waiter is not proposed, but it is possible that the cafeteria and the automat will serve Chicago all of its restaurant food before the war is over.

Business Men in Charge.

"My plan includes the organization immediately of various business sections," said Mr. Stumer last night, "with a business man in charge of each section. The chief of the section will be selected from his own line of business.

"When the chiefs have been appointed, questionnaires will be sent to all commercial and industrial concerns with the idea of bringing in suggestions for reforms and economies in the conduct of business. It is not so much our intention to exercise police powers as to bring about economies with the mutual consent of the various lines of activity."

Where changes are contemplated in concerns conducting interstate trade, the national administration will see that the orders apply equally to all houses in the same line of business.

Goes to Capital on Wednesday.

Mr. Stumer will go to Washington on Wednesday to confer with the war industries board. He will appoint the chiefs of sections on his return. Announcement of the new work was made by the State Council of Defense, following its appointment of Mr. Stumer, and contains the following:

"This new activity is undertaken in response to requests for action on many subjects from the commercial economy board of the Council of National Defense at Washington. From time to time that body has asked state councils to take on campaigns for 'carry home your purchases,' for cutting down Christmas giving, and the like, all with a view to saving time, labor, and money.

"Mr. Stumer has been chosen to conduct the work because of his long experience in merchandising and kindred business and his patriotic enthusiasm for the task. The particular economy problem to be tackled first has not yet been determined."

TWO KILLED, ONE HURT IN AUTO.

Tullytown, Pa., Aug. 3.—Two men were killed and a third seriously injured today when a train struck an automobile at the railroad crossing here. Names of the men killed have not been learned, but the injured man is D. W. McCaughy of Lawrenceburg, Ky.

DEFEATISM NOW THE CHIEF GERMAN SONG—REVENTLOW

AMSTERDAM, Aug. 3.—Count Reventlow, writing in the Tages Zeitung of Berlin on the anniversary of the fourth year of the war, says:

"The beginning of the fifth year of the war is marked in a large part of the German press by reflections which are overflowing with resignation, melancholy, and whining.

"The tearful defeatism that runs through the German public life these days has a perniciously laming effect, and more so because with some people the underlying view may be perceived or is expressly stated by them that if one would end the war it would, after all, be an easy thing to do, as one need only join Grey and Wilson in the league of nations."

NATION RAISES VOICE IN VICTORY PRAYER TODAY

Fourth Anniversary of England's Entrance Into the War.

Today, the fourth anniversary of the descent upon the world of the cataclysm of war, the nation raises its voice in an earnest prayer for the success of its and its allies' far flung battle lines. The day has been appointed by the State Council of Defense, in conjunction with the heads of religious denominations throughout the state, as a day of prayer in Illinois.

It is a day of commemoration, but not of celebration. There will be nothing ostentatious, nothing demonstrative, but merely prayers and services, which will be performed with as much sentiment and fervor as that with which the bulletins were eyed a few years ago.

Real Anniversary of War.

"The State Council of Defense of Illinois is highly gratified by the response to its suggestion that Aug. 4 be observed as the real anniversary of the great war," Samuel Insull, chairman of the State Council of Defense, said yesterday. "While the first official declaration of war—that of Austria against Serbia—took place on July 28, 1914, the impending conflict took on the dimensions of a world war only by the conjunction of four other events—namely: invasion of Belgium by Germany on Aug. 3, 1914; Germany's declaration of war against France, Aug. 3, 1914; Germany's declaration of war against Belgium, Aug. 4, 1914; finally and conclusively, Great Britain's declaration of war against Germany, on account of violated Belgium, Aug. 4, 1914.

Great Stimulus to Morale.

"I believe there will be a sermon tomorrow on the high significance of the cause of the allies and a prayer for conclusive victory in almost every church of every denomination in Illinois. The results which will inevitably follow, in effect upon the morale of our people, are inestimable."

FRENCH ARMORED CARS NOW FIGHT IN BIG FLEETS

ON THE FRENCH FRONT IN FRANCE, Friday, Aug. 2.—[Havas Agency.]—The French armored car has taken such an important part in recent operations that it may really be called a new arm of the service. French tacticians have worked out a method of employing them so that these armored cars seem to have solved the problem of the rapid advance of artillery with infantry.

They are in constant touch with the commander of operations and coöperate with the aviation service, the artillery and the infantry by means of ingenious signals. Carrier pigeons keep headquarters informed as to their progress.

The French are now employing three models of armored cars—the Saint Chamond, weighing twenty-three tons and carrying a crew of eight; the Schneider, thirteen tons and manned by six soldiers, an dthe Renault, six tons and two soldiers.

The machines fight in large formation, forming batteries and groups. Batteries of light cars are easily concealable in shell holes and clumps of bushes. They have been particularly useful in the present operations in destroying machine gun nests and blockhouses and paralyzing counter offensives. They also have operated against enemy artillery.

The crews of these cars are giving extraordinary proofs of their disregard for danger and fatigue. No one is required to serve in cars, as they are manned only by volunteers.

WILSON, SCHWAB, AND T. R. URGE AID TO MAIMED

Back Reconstruction of Fighters as Duty of Nation.

New York, Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Theodore Roosevelt and Charles M. Schwab are contributors to the August issue of "Carry On," a magazine on the reconstruction of disabled soldiers and sailors which is edited by the office of Surgeon Gen. William C. Gorgas. The August issue carried the following word of commendation from the president:

"The White House, Washington.—There is no subject which deserves more immediate or earnest consideration than the subject of the physical reconstruction of disabled soldiers. It must be gratifying to the country that broadly conceived plans with regard to this matter are being not only developed but carried out, and I personally welcome every instrumentality which is being used to bring about the proper execution of such plans.

"WOODROW WILSON."

"Our Plain Duty"—T. R.

Col. Roosevelt says in the first article in the magazine:

"It is the plain duty of every American citizen, men and women, to stand back of these returned fighters and to give them the help they deserve. The help should be given generously. It should also be given intelligently.

"Mere sentimental pampering would be ruinous to the men and to the commonwealth. What men need is an opportunity to make good as straight citizens."

"To meet this need it is necessary for the government and the men themselves to take the right attitude. Moreover, the families of the men must be sensible and urge the men to get back on the job. Finally the employers in every line of business must understand that a man's real worth is measured more by his brains than by his limbs, and must coöperate in the great work."

Schwab Backs Plans.

Charles M. Schwab asserts that the majority of the men crippled in the war can be reëducated for many trades and businesses.

"In my years of experience as an employer of large groups of men," he said, "I have rarely known a man who really used his brains to his full capacity and failed to advance. I believe that the emphasis of this fact will have much to do with the recovery and success of our disabled soldiers and sailors."

Lieut. Patterson, 'Tribune' Editor, Wins Captaincy

French mail received in Chicago yesterday brought to THE TRIBUNE office the news that Lieut. Joseph Medill Patterson, one of the editors of THE TRIBUNE, has been advanced to the rank of a captain. He is now Capt. Patterson of Battery C, One Hundred and Forty-ninth U. S. artillery, which according to Gen. March's statement yesterday is actively participating in the great Marne drive. Capt. Patterson's picture appears in the rotogravure section of this paper.

FOE LINE STRONG AFTER RETREAT, OFFICERS WARN

Intrenched for Counter Offensive, French Generals Say.

BY WALTER DURANTY.

Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES, Aug. 3.—The second battle of the Marne, if less dramatic and involving a narrower front than the first, has produced an identical result whose importance is hardly less great than in 1914. At the same time it is a mistake to build overextravagant hopes for the immediate future.

French soldiers from commandant generals to privates agree in giving the Boche credit for the skillful nature of the retreat carried out in the most difficult circumstances. The Germans have fought desperately. It is pointed out, moreover, that Hindenburg's line is not only considerably shortened—this, of course, applies equally to the allies—but is strengthened very materially by the abandonment of the salient and nearness to the old supply and concentration bases.

In Position for Counter Stroke.

He is unquestionably in a better position than before to launch a counter stroke that his still existing superiority of effectives might warrant and which effects of disasters on the people at home will demand, for it must be remembered that in the early spring the military party staked its authority and reputation on a victorious offensive that would end the war this summer.

A policy of strong defensive, that might seem the wisest course, now will be met in Germany by the challenge, "If it is untrue that you could beat the enemy in the field why didn't you adopt a defensive before without wasting so many lives?" To which the military chiefs will have no reply. A speedy attempt to retrieve the failure is almost certain as an alternative to throwing up the sponge entirely.

May Revolt Against Slaughter.

How far the morale of the enemy will stand a new call is doubtful. Well trained and disciplined as the Germans are, there is a limit to human endurance. Letters found recently on prisoners demonstrate this. To quote two out of many: The wife of an officer who was taken prisoner wrote her husband last month: "Surely you will be relieved soon. Your account of losses is terrible. It is dreadful that you and the handful of men left should be forced to form a company which is a mere skeleton compared to the strength it should have been." Another man wrote: "We had a dreadful time at the Marne crossing—terrible French fire everywhere and ghastly losses in the river crossing. How it will end I don't dare think."

MARCH DENIES YARN OF '12,000 LOST ON MARNE'

Story Sent Over Country Due to Misinterpretation.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—Widely published reports today that Gen. March, chief of staff, had told the senate military committee that Gen. Pershing estimated the American casualties in the Marne fighting at 12,000 not only grossly misinformed the country but caused consternation and regret among war department officials.

Not only did Gen. March hotly deny that he had made any such statement, but the senators who conferred with him, as well, also declared he had not done so. Secretary Baker in a talk with newspaper correspondents and the committee on public information in a formal statement denounced the reports. When the senators at the weekly conference asked the chief of staff if he had any estimate of the American casualties in the Marne fighting, Gen. March replied that he had not.

No Estimate, He Says.

Later, in his semi-weekly conference with the Washington correspondents, the chief of staff was asked:

"Have you any estimate as to the number of casualties?"

Gen. March's reply was:

"None whatever."

Gen. March and the senators who conferred with him explained that he had been asked what the total of casualties already reported was and that the general had replied between 12,000 and 14,000. This number is the sum total of the war department's official daily lists and is published in many newspapers throughout the country. It makes no account of the Marne fighting. Gen. March's reply was distorted into representing him as saying Gen. Pershing estimated the cost of the Marne battle at that number.

Difficulty of Accuracy.

The real situation as to the casualties in the big fight is that Gen. Pershing has been unable to estimate the number or begin sending the names because the wounded are scattered through French and British hospitals at various points and it has been physically impossible to assemble an accurate and complete list. This, however, is being done as rapidly as possible, but Secretary Baker and Gen. March are determined that the country shall not be needlessly distressed by an inaccurate casualty list which will need to be corrected later.

The list will be brought to the United States at the earliest possible moment.

Facts in Case.

At his conference today, referring to Secretary Baker's statement of last night, Gen. March said:

"The casualty question I understood was to be covered by the secretary of war, and believe he did say something about it. Gen. Pershing replied to our order to send in all casualties that the delay in sending them in was due to the fact that our men were serving under the British and the French as well as under our own commanders, but that casualties would be cabled as soon as they had been completely verified. You can well imagine how disastrous it would be if the casualties were cabled and then corrections had to be made. The distress would be beyond all question, and so these lists are going to come in and as soon as they do come in they will be given out, whatever they are."

Denial by Baker.

Secretary Baker in his talk to the correspondents said:

"I have before me a copy of an afternoon paper carrying a statement that Gen. Pershing estimates United States casualties at 12,000, and says that Gen. March said that to the military affairs committee. That is not so. Gen. March said nothing on the subject, nor did I. Nobody said anything on that subject or anything like it that I can recall.

"There was a chart showing the total number of casualties in the American expeditionary force up to the present time of all kinds from the sources and that aggregated something like 12,000, and that chart was shown, but it had nothing whatever to do with casualties in the present drive."

The committee on public information denied the story and said:

"At the request of the chief of staff editors and correspondents are hereby cautioned against publishing these false statements that any estimate has been made regarding the number of American casualties."

In a statement tonight F. A. Walker, managing editor of the Washington Times, said the report that there had been 12,000 casualties in the American forces in the present offensive was received from a press association and was printed on that authority.

STREAM OF U. S. MEN OVERSEA MARVEL OF WAR

Allied "Teamwork" Has Produced the Result, Briton Says.

BY CHARLES H. GRASTY.

Chicago Tribune-New York Times Cable.
[Copyright: 1918.]

LONDON, Aug. 3.—The most titanic achievement of all this war has been the transport of the American army across the Atlantic. Sir Joseph Mackay, controller of shipping, has prepared a statement in which he says:

"Probably no one who is not familiar with the shipping problem can appreciate the character of this transport movement. It is the biggest thing of the kind which has ever been attempted.

"We were not a little proud of the manner in which we transported and maintained our army in South Africa, but in the light of the American movement that achievement was comparatively modest.

Ruthlessness Foiled.

"The whole German people were led to believe that piracy, practiced with the utmost ruthlessness, would ruin this ambitious transport scheme. What has happened? More than 1,000,000 troops have been carried across the Atlantic and the lives of less than 300 soldiers have been lost.

"On the average about 60 per cent of the American soldiers have been carried in British ships and the proportion is rising steadily."

"While the American soldiers have been traveling to Europe the 7,000,000 British dominion and Indian troops, engaged in six theaters of war in France, Flanders, Italy, Saloniki, Palestine, Mesopotamia, Persia, and Egypt, have been supported with reinforcements and supplies and their sick and wounded carried. In some cases the fresh men had to be brought from Canada, South Africa, Australia, and New Zealand. Also a large volume of shipping has been required by the British fleet, which is largely dependent on mercantile tonnage for the fuel and stores.

Praises U. S. Organization.

"This transport miracle has only been rendered possible by the efficient organization on the American side and our assistance on this side. The American genius for organization has been once more exhibited. If the American railways had not been operated with success, the whole transport movement might have failed.

"After every suitable ship under the American flag had been pressed into the transport service the tonnage was still inadequate. That is where we came in, willingly and wholeheartedly coöperating to insure the movement of troops.

"Of the 638,000 troops carried in April, May, and June, 331,000 were accommodated in British ships. Owing to the rapidity with which the men are now being carried down to the coast, it is probable that during the next few weeks nearly two-thirds of the American troops will be carried in British ships.

Where England Has Sacrificed.

"Now we are only able to face these new responsibilities by sacrificing, for the time, not only British, but imperial interests. Ships under normal conditions are engaged in the trades between the British Islands and the colonies. We have been compelled to sacrifice to a large extent the communications between the mother country and the dominions. This concentration of shipping has meant the severing of trade associations built up during long years. Every business man well understands the character of that sacrifice."

Then Sir Joseph Mackay turned to the question of supplies. "There is always a temptation," he said, "to think of an army in terms of men only, but an army requires an enormous volume of material, guns, airplanes, wagons, ammunition, food and stores. In June 500,000 tons of stores for the American troops were carried across the Atlantic. Horses, in particular present a great difficulty. The army which is transported has to be kept supplied with all it requires from week to week and day to day. Consequently the larger the number of troops transported, the greater the burden on tonnage.

Germany's Advantage.

"However long the war may last, the stream of supplies must be maintained. The German army has a continuous line. It is connected with its sources of supply by railways, and it can move its military impedimenta from the factory behind the lines swiftly as well as cheaply, varying the supply arrangements with ease.

"As to the British army: the English channel lies between it and its main bases of supply. That means that the British authorities are compelled to maintain behind the lines larger supplies. The American army is about 100 times as far removed from its bases of supplies as the British army, and that fact exaggerates the difficulties of the tonnage problem, because not only must large reserves be maintained of military material and food, but provision must be made on a vast scale for extensive workshops, hospitals, and so on.

U. S. Achievements in France.

"Not until the war is over shall we be able to form a complete conception of the enormous quantity of stores of all kinds which have had to be brought across the Atlantic. I believe that the American army now has in France a railroad with more miles of track and a heavier equipment than the Erie railroad. But that is not all, for there is no more remarkable feature of this transport movement than the success with which the Americans have transformed some of the French ports. They have brought them up to the highest standards on the United States seaboard."

CALLS SOLDIER'S PAY RIGHT BASIS FOR PAY OF ALL

New York, Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Discussing the economic readjustment in this country, the Journal of the American Bankers' association points out in its August number that the tendency is toward placing every one on the same basis of reward that the soldiers get.

"There is evidenced," it says, "a general belief that no one should profit from the war. The man at the front and the man getting ready for the front offer everything for the nation's success. The man at home should have no advantage. We have not yet come to regard life as cheap or profit as the one aim of all effort. This is one of the benefactions of the war.

"The readjustments are going on before us constantly. The one counteracting or hampering influence is the necessity of keeping business going. To denounce the profiteer is not to denounce profits. There must be gain and the incentive to it or our economic structure would crumble. Heed must be given to the intricate relationships of business and their interdependencies. If we concede profits as an incident to service we must concede taxes as the equitable consequence. If we deny the workman the wage that competitive bidding for his services and the power of his union may give, it is only to deny him what is being denied his employer."

250,000 YANKS CHASING HUNS ACROSS VESLE

Reilly's Bucks Crush the Prussian Guard Trying to Stem Rout.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—Gen. Pershing is leading an army of 1,000,000 men in France, exclusive of the divisions brigaded with the British, and the first American army corps of six divisions, or more than 160,000 fighting men, is operating as a fighting unit under command of Maj. Gen. Hunter Liggett in the storm center of attack. Three other divisions also are in the battle, or a grand total of about 250,000 fighting men.

These facts were disclosed by Gen. March, the chief of staff, in his semi-weekly talk with correspondents today.

Rainbow Repulses Guards.

Gen. March also definitely identified the Rainbow division, including the One Hundred and Forty-ninth field artillery as the division that annihilated the Prussian guard and turned a German attempt at counter attack into a German rout.

The Thirty-second division, composed of Michigan and Wisconsin national guard troops, the chief of staff said, have been brought from the Swiss border and joined the first corps in the Fere-en-Tardenois.

July troop shipments to France were 300,000, breaking the previous record of 276,000 in June. Gen. March announced, bringing the total number of troops embarked to more than 1,300,000.

Eight Divisions in Drive.

Eight American divisions were named as participating as complete units in the allied drive, the First and Second regulars, the latter including the Marines; the Third and Fourth regulars, the Twenty-sixth New England national guard division; the Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania guard division, the Thirty-second Michigan-Wisconsin division, and the Forty-second Rainbow division. News dispatches today identified another, the Forty-first, or Sunset division, from the Pacific coast, in the fighting.

In the allied counter offensive, which marks the greatest success of the allies on the western front in four years of war, the Marines achieved the initial successes at Chateau Thierry. But the First army corps, composed of four national guard divisions, the Twenty-sixth, Forty-second, Thirty-second, and Forty-first, and the First and Second regulars, get the credit for aiding the French to turn defeat into victory, and it has fallen to the Rainbow division to win the greatest glory of the offensive.

Guns and Dead.

A confidential telegram from Gen. Pershings shows the capture of heavy booty in guns and ammunition, and the killing of thousands of Germans whose bodies, piled in heaps, were trod over by the advancing Americans.

"An officer of Gen. Muir's (Twenty-eighth) division," the cablegram read, "just returned from Fere-en-Tardenois, reports that it does not seem possible for an army to have gathered as many guns, as much ammunition as the Germans had abandoned in their retreat, which had been so hasty that they had not time to bury their dead. The ground was so covered with corpses that it was impossible to advance without walking over them."

All Under American Flag.

Referring to the rapid organization of the American army into fighting units under corps commanders, Gen. March divulged that the troops brigaded with the British and French are being brought into the line to remain hereafter under the American colors.

"In connection with the American forces abroad," said the general, "there has been some discussion about the proportion of the force which is brigaded with the British, and I will say that Gen. Pershing has in his own area as his own forces, not brigaded with the British, over 1,000,000.

"In this section of the line," Gen. March continued, indicating on the war map the line just southeast of Fere-en-Tardenois, "our first corps is operating, with Gen. Liggett in actual command. You will see by the position of the flags that our divisions have now been put in contiguously and are actually getting together as an American force."

Carrying out this plan of forming the corps into fighting units, Gen. March added that the major generals named as temporary commanders of the five corps had surrendered commands of their divisions to the officers next in rank.

Gen. March revealed that the Thirty-fifth division has replaced the Thirty-second division on the Swiss frontier. Gen. March refused to reveal the identity of the combatant unit sent to Italy, saying he did not think the unit had been identified by the enemy. So far as has been reported, this unit has not yet actually entered the firing line, the general said. The Eighty-ninth division, Gen. March said, had reached France, but no further report as to its location has been received.

Start on New Divisions.

While commands are being consolidated in France, active steps are being taken to organize the twelve new divisions recently announced. Gen. March announced that the following officers are returning from France to the United States for assignment to commands in the new divisions.

Brig. Gen. James J. Hornbrook, assigned to the southern department; Brig. Gen. Charles W. Kutz, assigned to command the engineer camp at Camp Humphreys; Brig. Gen. George C. Saffarans, assigned to Seventeenth brigade, Ninth division, Camp Sheridan, Montgomery, Ala.; Brig. Gen. Alfred A. Kickok, assigned to Nineteenth brigade, Tenth division, Camp Funston, Kas.; Brig. Gen. Douglas MacArthur, assigned to Twenty-first brigade, One Hundred and Tenth division, Camp Meade, Md.; Brig. Gen. J. N. Hodges, Twenty-third brigade, Twelfth division, Camp Devens, Mass.; Brig. Gen. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Twenty-fifth brigade, Thirteenth division, Camp Lewis, Wash.

Sisters Star in Skit of the Army and Divorce Court

Mrs. Naomi Feulner, 18 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Olmstead of Highland Park, yesterday, through her attorney, Justin K. Orvis of Chicago, began suit for separate maintenance against her husband, Fred Feulner. The bill was sent to Lake county for filing.

Efforts of Mrs. Feulner and her sister, Mrs. Raymond F. Garrity, to have their husbands inducted into the United States army, from which the husbands had previously obtained exemption or deferred classification on grounds of marriage, were disclosed last night by Theodore Swan, clerk of Lake county exemption board No. 1, at Libertyville. Feulner was not accepted because of his noncitizenship status, but Garrity has been reclassified for active military service.

Former Cabaret Singer.

The Garritys were married four and a half years ago, but have lived apart except for two years, Mrs. Garrity said. She is a former cabaret singer and under the name of Grace La Reaux has appeared at the La Salle roof garden, the Hotel Sherman, and other places. The Garritys and the Feulners separated on the same night, July 19, and the two sisters are now living with their parents, the Olmsteads. It was after the separations that the two appeared before the exemption board and sought to have their husbands reclassified.

Count Zeppelin and the House that Jack Built achieved mention in Mrs. Feulner's bill, which, after reciting a long list of alleged acts of cruelty and a penchant for road houses, sets forth that "said defendant is what is termed a 'dandy,' priding himself in neatness of dress, affability of manner, sibilancy of speech, and often boasted . . . of his conquest of other women."

Tells "Wondrous Stories."

During the courtship Feulner "told most wondrous stories purporting to be the history of his life and promised your oratrix that if she would but love him and marry him that he would take her to his palatial home and large estates in Alsace-Lorraine as soon as the present war was over; that he had an income therefrom of $18,000 at that time, but could not draw the same until the close of the war; telling her of the wonderful dwelling, its shady walks, commanding scenery; talking to her of moonlight ocean scenes, wondrous automobile drives in foreign lands, and promising her a box of diamonds, twenty-six in number . . . and as soon as they were married the finest automobile speedster in the country."

Then came the marriage on Sept. 5, 1917, and "though he bought an automobile it was a second hand roadster of ancient vintage, . . . but with this automobile the defendant squandered the money he received in giving pleasure rides to women other than your oratrix and all without her consent; and further, said defendant flaunted women in the said car in front of the home of your oratrix by driving past her frequently."

Says He Penciled His Eyebrows.

Further along it is set forth that Mr. Feulner spent "part of his time painting and rouging his face, penciling his eyebrows and strutting about in white flannel trousers; dressing in gaudy raiment, decorating the road sides and other places with cigaret stubs and empty bottles.

"Your oratrix further represents that the said defendant claims to be a close relative and nephew of Count Zeppelin, the inventor of the Zeppelin airships in Germany; that he had a brother in the aviation service of Germany, who was killed in such service, and is in possession of the papers leaving insurance or other property to the defendant in the amount of $3,600."

The case will be heard at the October term of the Lake county circuit court at Waukegan.

U. S. PASSES TWO MILLION MARK IN RIFLE OUTPUT

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Production of army rifles in the United States since war was declared has passed the 2,000,000 mark. Announcement was made today that up to and including July 27, 1918, the total number of rifles produced, inspected, and accepted was 2,000,798.

This includes in part 1,523,156 of United States model 1917 and 280,000 Russian rifles. It does not include the 600,000 United States model 1903 (Springfield) rifles estimated to have been on hand before the war.

"Machine gun production," an official statement says, "continues to show a steady increase. The number of heavy Browning machine guns inspected and accepted during the week ending July 27 was 1,106, a decrease of 257 under production for the previous week.

"Light Brownings inspected and accepted during the last week reached a total of 2,624, an increase of 557 over the previous week. Since the war began and up to and including July 27, the total number of machine guns of all types, produced, inspected, and accepted was 96,006, including 8,428 heavy Brownings and 14,895 light Brownings.

"The total output of pistols and revolvers inspected and accepted, up to and including July 27, was 414,015, including 235,700 .45 model 1911 pistols and 178,315 .45 model 1917 revolvers.

'Tribune' Army Edition Called Link to Home

Attorney John E. Owens yesterday received a letter from a Chicago friend in the trenches in France. The letter speaks of the army edition of THE TRIBUNE, published in Paris and circulated widely among the American soldiers over there. It says:

"Dear Judge: Inclosed find a copy of CHICAGO TRIBUNE, published in Paris. It reaches all the boys over here and is the missing link between them and home. I thought you would like one as a souvenir, so am sending it along.

"Moved down the line from Paris Saturday and had a hell of a time getting here. Can see Germany and Switzerland from the trenches. Mountains are wonderful. Would make a blind man see or a dummy talk. Wearing woolens and overcoat."

The letter was dated June 28.

FRENCH TIP OFF 13TH ENGINEERS TO HUN ATTACK

Heard Beforehand Germans Had Planned to Turn Verdun.

Information from France throws some light on the activities of the famous Thirteenth engineers, the regiment of Chicago district railway men, in the recent ebb and flow of events on the Marne.

The German drive eastward along the Marne does not seem to have had for its ultimate objective merely the capture of Reims, but also the turning of the Argonne forest and the great fortress of Verdun, which for four years have blocked the Germans from the east. The dispatches themselves have indicated that large numbers of crack German troops have been stationed in positions from which they could be rushed into the St. Mihiel salient. This has been clung to by the Germans for just such a jumping off place in case of a pincer action against Verdun.

Thirteenth Evacuates Region.

Information now shows that, anticipating that the strength of the Germans might enable them to break through to Bar le Duc either through the St. Mihiel or the Marne routes, the Thirteenth engineers were put to work withdrawing huge supplies out of their region, which is in the neighborhood of this great fortress.

They received orders from the French some three days before the Germans actually opened and crossed the Marne and began evacuating at once.

The engineers brought to the southern terminus of the lines which they operate all their rolling stock, including numerous locomotives from the United States, tools and material, large quantities of French material, and fuel. They evacuated some of the great hospitals through this region and even brought their personal effects to the little village where their lines join the French railroads. The former alderman, Capt. Francis Taylor, emptied the regiment's warehouses, which are under his care, and had almost all his supplies at the evacuation base when the German attack began.

Maj. Whiting Moves.

Maj. Whiting also moved down from the field headquarters of the regiment and proceeded south to the trans-shipment base. Col. Howard took personal charge of the enormous task.

The French told the Americans that they had discovered the Germans hoped to turn the west flank of the Argonne forest within a month, or even less, and crush that part of the American army which may be in the east of France. Then they estimated with the menace of Verdun on their left flank eliminated they could reduce Paris at their ease.

American War Chiefs Ask Draft for Ages 18 to 45

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—[Special.]—All men in the United States between the ages of 18 and 45 inclusive will be subject to compulsory military service as soon as congress enacts into law recommendations of the war department announced today.

Following a conference with Secretary of War Baker today Senator Chamberlain of Oregon, chairman of the senate military affairs committee, made public the information that the war department had prepared a bill, with President Wilson's approval, lowering the minimum draft age limit to 18 years and raising the maximum limit to 45 years.

The announcement was received with the greatest exultation by the advocates of universal military training and of a big army program.

Recognizes Big Principle.

While additional legislation would be necessary to make universal military training the permanent policy of the nation, the bill recognizes the principle of universal training and would put it into effect for the period of the war.

The bill will enable the president to call young men into the service by classes arranged according to their ages. It is understood that the war department will take advantage of this authority to begin the training of young men as soon as they reach their eighteenth year and have them fitted for immediate service on the firing line as soon as they reach the age deemed best for such duty. It is the belief of the universal training advocates that this system will prove so satisfactory during the period of the war that no difficulty will be encountered in enacting legislation putting it into permanent operation.

4,000,000 Overseas.

Senator Chamberlain said that while no exact figures were available to show the increase in the fighting man power the measure would provide, he believed it would enable the United States to maintain an army of from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 abroad with an equal number in constant training in the United States.

The bill drafted by the war department will be introduced Monday in the senate by Senator Chamberlain and in the house at the same time by Representative Dent of Alabama, chairman of the house military affairs committee. As soon as he had returned to the capitol from the war department Senator Chamberlain issued a call for a meeting of his committee on Tuesday to begin consideration of the bill.

Needed to Get Men.

Secretary of War Baker explained that the age limit of 18 to 45 years was adopted because it was found that it was necessary to extend the ages this far to get enough class 1 men to carry out the military man power program.

All the possible combinations of ages were carefully considered, Mr. Baker said, but all others were rejected.

While Secretary Baker said the question of extending the work or fight order to apply to the new classes brought within the draft by this bill has not been discussed, this will follow automatically, it is expected.

But all intention of utilizing the work or fight rule for men between 18 and 45 as a means of enforcing conscription of labor was denied by Secretary Baker.

Some Oppose Lower Age.

Several members of the senate military affairs committee are opposed to lowering the minimum age limit, but Senator Chamberlain does not believe that any serious delay will ensue in obtaining a majority agreement on the measure. The senate, however, is under unanimous consent to transact no business until Aug. 26, and after that date it is bound by another unanimous consent agreement to take up prohibition and keep it under consideration until disposed of.

An effort probably will be made to call the senate back into regular session before the expiration of the three day recess program, if it becomes apparent that the military affairs committee can have the bill ready. As the parliamentary situation now stands it would be next to impossible to put the bill through both houses before the middle of September.

By many senators it is regarded as a satisfactory solution of the labor problem, which has been looming up in a serious aspect before congress during the last few months. It will enable the war department to extend the "work or fight" order to cover all men between the ages of 18 and 45. This, it was pointed out, would take care of the shortage of labor due to employment of men in nonessential industries and also the situation created by strikes in munitions factories.

Gen. March told members of the senate military committee there is no present danger of a shortage in man power to keep the American armies filled up.

'MONEY MACHINE' AGAIN FOR $5,100

Concerning the old, new story of the "money making" machine:

Theodore Theodore, who conducts a rooming house at 5148 North Clark street, had amassed $3,950. Likewise, one of his roomers, thrifty Peter Miller, had saved $1,150. And last Wednesday along came the affable stranger with the magic machine. All one had to do was to press a button and the greenbacks rolled out, ad infin. Theodore and Miller invested their all.

Last night they notified the police of the Summerdale station that the machine wouldn't work. The stranger has disappeared.

Illinois Must Provide 200 for Limited Army Training

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—Twenty-nine states and the District of Columbia were called upon today by Provost Marshal General Crowder to supply 6,000 white registrants qualified for limited military training. They will entrain Aug. 5 for the Syracuse, N. Y., recruiting camp. The quota for Illinois is 200.

GERMAN SCORN OF AMERICANS TURNS TO FEAR

Diary Gives Proof That They Have Learned of Prowess.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—[Special.]—The diary of a German officer recently captured by United States marines in France discloses how the contemptuous opinion of the Germans for the fighting ability of American troops may be changed literally over night.

The German, who had written in his diary that "it must be a sad outfit which allows itself to be thrown out by the Americans," later expressed reverent thanks that God had mercifully preserved him from them. This comment ended his written record, for the writer was a prisoner in American hands the following day.

Secretary Daniels today made public extracts of the diary which was that of Reserve Lieutenant Tillmanns, Second battalion, Fortieth regiment (Baden guards), Twenty-eighth division. This was the fourth division which the marines had against them in the fighting around Chateau Thierry.

"The other three divisions," says a navy department statement, "were so badly cut up that they could not carry out their orders to attack."

Extracts from the Diary.

The extracts from Lieut. Tillmanns' diary follow:

"June 6th—Departure from Rocourt 3 p. m. to Breuyres further back Coincy. We had to move out of Rocourt because it did not belong to our sector. Rear is crammed full of troops. Billets, therefore, very scarce.

June 7th.—At the front. American troops have made counter attacks. We have to move to the front again. Route of march over Rocourt Epaux. We are lying in the woods to the right of Etrepilly for the present in position. In the night of 8th and 9th we will relieve the front line. It must be a sad outfit which allows itself to be thrown out by Americans. In the evening of the day of the 8th there was heavy artillery fire. Fortunately, the artillery fire did not reach us.

"Worst Night of Life."

"June 8th to 9th.—Moved forward at night and relieved the Four Hundred and Sixty-first regiment at 4 in the morning in the Bois de Belleau. Incomprehensibly wide sector. Where there were three companies, we have only one.

"June 9th to 10th.—The worst night of my life. I am lying in the thick wood on an open height in little holes behind rocks, for this is heavy artillery fire; until 6 o'clock in the morning. It is a wonder that the fellows were all at their posts when the Americans attacked. The attack, thank God, was repulsed. God has again mercifully preserved me."

WILSON STARTS AID FOR RUSSIA; NO INVASION

United States, be most unwise to divide or dissipate our forces.

"As the government of the United States sees the present circumstances, therefore, military action is admissible in Russia now only to render such protection and help as is possible to the Czecho-Slovaks against the armed Austrian and German prisoners who are attacking them and to steady any efforts at self-government or self-defense in which the Russians themselves may be willing to accept assistance."

Whether from Vladivostok or from Murmansk and Archangel, the only present object for which American troops will be employed will be to guard military stores which may subsequently be needed by Russian forces and to render such aid as may be acceptable to the Russians in the organization of their own self-defense.

Helping Our Allies.

"With such objects in view the government of the United States is now coöperating with the governments of France and Great Britain in the neighborhood of Murmansk and Archangel. The United States and Japan are the only powers which are just now in a position to act in Siberia in sufficient force to accomplish even such modest objects as those that have been outlined.

"The government of the United States has therefore proposed to the government of Japan that each of the two governments send a force of a few thousand men to Vladivostok, with the purpose of coöperating as a single force in the occupation of Vladivostok and in safeguarding, so far as it may, the country to the rear of the westward moving Czecho-Slovaks; and the Japanese government has consented.

"In taking this action the government of the United States wishes to announce to the people of Russia in the most public and solemn manner that it contemplates no interference with the political sovereignty of Russia, no intervention in her internal affairs, not even in the local affairs of the limited areas which her military force may be obliged to occupy, and no impairment of her territorial integrity either now or hereafter; but that what we are about to do has as its single and only object the rendering of such aid as shall be acceptable to the Russian people themselves in their endeavors to regain control of their own affairs, their own territory, and their own destiny. The Japanese government, it is understood, will issue a similar assurance.

"These plans and purposes of the government of the United States have been communicated to the governments of Great Britain, France, and Italy, and those governments have advised the department of state that they assent to them in principle. No conclusion that the government of the United States has arrived at in this important matter is intended, however, as an effort to restrict the actions or interfere with the independent judgment of the governments with which we are now associated in the war.

Look for Early Mission.

"It is also the hope and purpose of the government of the United States to take advantage of the earliest opportunity to send to Siberia a commission of merchants, agricultural experts, labor advisers, Red Cross representatives, and agents of the Young Men's Christian association accustomed to organizing the best methods of spreading useful information and rendering educational help of a modest kind, in order in some systematic way to relieve the immediate economic necessities of the people there in every way for which an opportunity may open. The execution of this plan will follow and will not be permitted to embarrass the military assistance rendered to the Czecho-Slovaks.

"It is the hope and expectation of the government of the United States that the governments with which it is associated will wherever necessary or possible lend their active aid in the execution of these military and economic plans."

President Wilson personally has been directing the framing of the proposals for aid to Russia and has prepared a statement explaining just what is to be done and making it clear that the United States intends to stand squarely beside the Russian people in their fight for democracy. It is expected that careful study will be given to the Japanese reply before his statement is issued.

REVOLT IN ARCHANGEL.

KANDALASKA, Russian Lapland, Aug. 3.—[By the Associated Press.]—A revolution against the Bolsheviki and in favor of the allies has occurred at Archangel. The soviet troops have fled the city.

After the revolution had been brought about, an allied detachment was landed at Archangel, occupying the railway station and the telegraph office with insignificant resistance.

Apparently there were no losses to the allied forces in their movement.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—An Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Zurich today says:

"Telegrams from Cracow state that after the assassination of Field Marshal von Eichhorn in Kiev more than 500 persons were arrested, including ex-Premier Winneschinks, Secretary Milukoff, and many members of the Constitutional-Democratic party. Martial law has been proclaimed throughout the province of Kiev.

"German reinforcements are continually arriving at Warsaw.

"Ten German soldiers have been found murdered in various parts of Kiev and reports of revolts among the Ukrainian peasants continue.

CHINA TO SEND REGIMENT.

PEKING, China, Tuesday, July 30.—[By the Associated Press.]—The Chinese government today appropriated $100,000 to finance the sending of a Chinese regiment to Vladivostok. The date of the departure of the regiment has not been fixed.

ON ROLL OF HONOR

Sergeants and Privates Figure in Day's Casualty Lists.

1. Sergt. I. F. Morrison; slightly wounded.
2. Sergt. Carl Zimmerman; died of disease.
3. Private Steve Jendrosrak; killed in action.
4. Sergt. Frank Schultz; died of disease.
5. Private Frank Brown; killed in action.

U-BOAT SINKS SCHOONER NEAR COAST OF MAINE

Probably Same One That Attacked San Diego, Navy Thinks.

Eastport, Me., Aug. 3.—The first successful foray of a German submarine in Canadian waters was reported here today. Capt. Charles E. Dagwell of the British lumber schooner Dornfontein and his crew of eight men landed in their small boat on Grand Manan island in the Bay of Fundy and reported that their vessel had been looted and set on fire by a U-boat twenty-five miles southwest of Brier island at 11:35 a. m. yesterday.

The submarine apparently was watching for bigger game. It was in a position commanding shipping from the Canadian ports of Yarmouth, N. S., and St. John, N. B., and was only a comparatively short distance outside American territorial waters.

The commander of the U-boat told Capt. Dagwell he had been on this coast six months and would be here until October. The submersible looked to be 275 feet in length. It carried two guns and had a crew of seventy-five men.

The Dornfontein was stocked with provisions for a voyage to South African ports and the Germans cheered as boat load after boat load of goods was transferred to the raider. The British sailors were allowed to take with them only the clothes they stood in.

Naval officers believe the U-boat is the same which sank four coal barges and set a tug afire off Cape Cod a week ago last Sunday.

War Has Developed Salvage.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Of 400 British ships sunk in the last two and a half years, at least 50 per cent have been raised from the bottom of the sea. The organization responsible—the admiralty salvage department—is composed entirely of experts employed by a commercial firm which engaged in the business before the war.

The number of ships of the mercantile marine actually salved by the department in two years from 1915 to 1917 was 260. All these vessels were of big tonnage. For the present year the monthly totals of such vessels salved were: January, fourteen; February, forty-one; March, thirty-seven; April, thirty-six, and May, nineteen. Thus the department has saved 407 important vessels of the mercantile marine. This does not include vessels salved outside of home waters.

BLACKHAWKS TO CROWN TRAINING WITH BIG STUNT

Elaborate Divisional Maneuvers Are Planned.

Camp Grant, Ill., Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Under the direction of Maj. Gen. C. H. Martin and Lieut. Col. Charles E. T. Lull, chief of operations, the Blackhawk division will culminate the hardest training week in its history next Thursday and Friday in the greatest field maneuver ever attempted by a military organization on American soil. Every officer and enlisted man in the fully organized division, including the artillery brigade on the Sparta, Wis., ranges, commanded by Col. P. R. Ward, will work toward unit perfection on plans of attact drawn up in exact duplication of the Yankee action on the Aisne-Marne front. The aerial service in Rantoul will coöperate.

The divisional trench area, greatly enlarged to form the base of operations for the 27,000 men who will engage in the maneuver, will be the scene of the first of three field problems included in the movement. The initial and by no means simple problem is one of emplacement of troops preparatory to an attack on a divisional front.

Big Problems Involved.

It will require not only the placing of regiments and brigades in the most advantageous position and on the second of a given time but also the placing of machine guns, trench mortars, and all other material to back up the drive. Officers of the artillery brigade in Sparta are working on their part of the problem, using maps of the battle ground here.

Actual attack on the German position, which extends some five miles to the east of the trenches and has been carefully consolidated to withstand the American rush, is the second problem before the division. Every soldier will go over the top and advance under the simulated artillery barrages, chasing Fritz from his strongly fortified position. Consolidation of the captured ground with complete reports from every officer commanding the attack will make up the third problem.

Four observation planes will operate in the maneuver, according to plans completed today, and the division liaison system will be brought into play.

Five Thousand on Holiday.

Five thousand selectives today took full advantage of the Saturday afternoon and Sunday leave today, crowding to Chicago trains the moment inspection was completed in the various regiments. Passenger traffic from camp jumped more than 300 per cent.

TEN CHICAGOANS ADDED TO CITY'S ROLL OF HEROES

Six Reported Dead and Four Wounded for Country.

The names of six more Chicagoans who died for their country will be engrossed upon the city's tablet of heroes. Four of these are mentioned in yesterday's casualty lists, two announced unofficially. The lists also name two as severely wounded, and another as wounded who was previously reported dead. One is named as slightly wounded, in a private letter.

Sergt. Carl Zimmerman of Company I of the Sixty-second infantry, died of disease on Friday at Camp Fremont, Cal. His parents are both dead, and his sister, Mrs. Clara Smith, who formerly lived at 3067 Gresham street, cannot now be found. An uncle, August Holtz, lives at 4826 Berteau avenue. Zimmerman had been in the army for the last six years. The body will be brought here for burial.

Killed in Action.

Private Frank Joseph Brown, 27 years old, Company L, Thirty-eighth machine gun battalion, is listed as killed in action. He formerly lived with his parents at 3733 South Hermitage avenue. He was drafted last September and last March arrived in France.

Private Steve Jehdrosrak, 25 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Jendrosrak, 1358 West Ohio street, is mentioned as killed in action on July 21. He enlisted in the Fifty-second infantry in May, 1917, and went across last February. He was born in Poland.

Sergt. Frank Schultz, dead of disease, was the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Schultz, 853 North Wood street. He was 21 years old last December and had been in the regular infantry for five years. A brother, Steve, 18, is in the navy, and another brother, John, is a druggist at 1800 West Chicago avenue.

In Canadian List.

In the Canadian casualty list of yesterday Vincent Sazma of 4912 South Honoré street is listed as dead; cause not mentioned. He was formerly a machinist.

Mrs. Elvira Vidal, 831 North St. Louis avenue, yesterday received word in a letter from an army chaplain that her son, Private Arthur Vidal, 23 years old, has been killed in action. She was previously notified that he had been slightly wounded early in June, and the tone of the letter seemed to indicate that he had returned to the front when he was killed. Vidal enlisted in 1913.

Private John Popelka of 2727 West Twenty-second street, who was previously reported killed in action, is now listed as wounded.

Proud of Americans.

Private Charles J. Bendl, 26, formerly lived with his aged widowed mother at 1638 South Crawford avenue. He was severely wounded on July 4. In a letter received by Mrs. Bendl the Rev. Father J. F. Hennesey, priest with the Forty-sixth infantry, imperial Australian forces in France, tells of Bendl's being wounded. The letter reads: "The Americans are very happy over their success. When in company with the Australians they attacked the Hun with wonderful success. Your boy was slightly wounded in the arm and back, but a few weeks should see him fit and well."

Corporal Lowell S. Blaisdell, 3710 Grenshaw street, is listed as severely wounded. He is 24 years old and enlisted in the One Hundred and Thirty-second infantry in April, 1917. He is married and his wife lives at the above address. He was formerly employed by the Kimbark Paper mills.

It was erroneously stated in THE TRIBUNE yesterday morning that Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Kizior, 2615 South Kolin avenue, parents of Private Joseph S. Kizior, severely wounded in the casualty list, were Austrians. They are natives of Poland.

Son Writes of Wound.

In a letter from her son, Sergt. I. F. Morrison, with the One Hundred and Thirty-first Infantry, Company C., who has been at the front since early June, Mrs. Wolf Morrison, 1439 Thome avenue, yesterday learned of his being slightly wounded on July 4.

"Yesterday was the most exciting 4th I have ever seen. I took part in my first battle, as a result of which I am in the hospital with a very slight wound," he writes. "We gained all our objectives with very slight losses and inflicted heavy casualties on the Boche. We captured 1,500 in addition to all we sent to the hospital and 'happy hunting ground'."

The "in case" letter which aviators often write before their first flight, to their nearest and dearest of kin, is something not as yet much heard of in this country, but the letter of Lieut. Richard Ristine, who was killed last week at Lake Charles, La., has just reached his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Ristine, of Cedar Rapids, Ia. Lieut. Ristine was THE TRIBUNE's second gold star. The letter runs: "While you read this, you will know that I have died while in the big game for democracy, the most wonderful death in the world. I have always fully appreciated the dangers of flying, but I entered this branch of the service because I hoped I could do my bit better in it. I have done what I could, but God has chosen me, as only one of many, who must go before the 'big game' is won."

GIVEN COMMISSIONS

Chicago Men Are Among Those Who Are Awarded Places in the Reserves.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Among the middle westerners commissioned today by the war department were the following Chicagoans:

Captain, medical reserve corps—Albert E. Mowry, 3505 Indiana avenue.

Lieutenant colonel, chemical warfare service, national army—Wendell G. Wilcox, 2401 Washington boulevard.

Captain, chemical warfare service, national army—Lawrence Howe, 523 Rookery.

Air Instructor Killed at San Diego Field

San Diego, Cal., Aug. 3.—Lieut. Clement R. Jacomini, a flying instructor at the army aviation camp at Rockwell field near here, died today as the result of injuries incurred yesterday when a plane in which he and another officer were flying fell about 150 feet in a nose dive. His companion was unhurt. Lieut. Jacomini's home was in Pasadena, Cal.

SENTENCED FOR DESERTING BABY.

George Drew, a chauffeur, and his wife, Elizabeth, of 1324 North La Salle street, were sentenced to one year in the bridewell yesterday for abandoning their baby, 1 month old. Drew left the infant on a street car in charge of Mrs. Mary Baker of 1431 North La Salle street, who discovered she had been imposed upon.

SUGAR HOARDING NEW YORK HOTELS FINED HEAVILY

New York, Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Five of New York's largest hotels and two of its restaurants were severely penalized by the federal food board today for hoarding sugar in violation of the rules of the United States food administration. The hotels involved were the Plaza, the St. Regis, the McAlpin, the Imperial, and the Claridge. The restaurants were the Fifth Avenue and the Savarin.

In the cases of the Plaza and the St. Regis the food board suspended their licenses for the baking of bread and pastry, and for the making of ice cream, for thirty days beginning Aug. 7. The Imperial was ordered to close its public eating places for two days, beginning tonight at midnight. The McAlpin, the Fifth Avenue restaurant, and the Savarin, operated by the Greeley Square Hotel company, contributed $10,000 to the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. The federal food board also suspended the license held by the Greeley Square Hotel company.

GRAB ANARCHIST IN PLOT TO BLOW UP A TROOPSHIP

New York, Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Climbing a rope ladder up the side of a big confiscated German liner used as a troop transport, Frederick Rouchat, a Belgian, was arrested at the Bush Terminal, Brooklyn, today by detectives for the army transport service.

He said he had been selected by lot to blow up the ship by a secret society of anarchists, according to the detectives. On orders of the society, Rouchat is alleged to have said, he started a fire on March 24 in the carpenter shop of the Morse Dry Dock and Repair company in Brooklyn, and he had been selected for several other dynamitings.

He also is reported to have told of the society's plans to destroy big munition factories in the United States. It is said he is an intimate friend of Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman.

Rouchat got inside the government reservation by eluding the guards. He formerly worked for the Robins Dry Dock and Repair company. No explosives were found on his person.

PEORIA POLICE GUARD THOMPSON AS CROWDS JEER

Mayor Gets Hot Reception When He Speaks in Theater.

Peoria, Ill., Aug. 8.—[Special.]—A crowd of 200 people gathered about the Majestic theater, where Mayor William Hale Thompson of Chicago, Republican candidate for the United States senate, spoke tonight. The crowd hooted during the continuance of the meeting and jeered the 200 people who had braved the demonstration to hear the address.

As Thompson left the theater a yelling mob followed him to the Jefferson hotel, where he is stopping. A cordon of police thrown about the theater prevented any overt act.

Mayor Thompson devoted a large portion of his remarks to the demonstration against him.

"I have been respectfully treated everywhere in the state except here," he said in concluding his talk. "My meetings have averaged an attendance of at least 1,000. It's worrying my opponents, and that is one reason why I think this demonstration was staged tonight. They haven't humiliated me in the least."

Blames Chicago Press.

At another time in his talk he referred to the opposition of the Chicago newspapers in previous fights and declared:

"That's the kind of a fight the mayor has been up against and that's the reason for the demonstration tonight. There are some sympathetic hearts in Peoria or this would not have been permitted tonight. It's your city administration, however, and that's a matter for you to look after."

It was a wild night in the downtown district. News that there was to be opposition to the Thompson meeting caused Chief Rhoades of the police department to send twelve detectives and officers to the Union station to see that there was no outbreak when Thompson arrived from Galesburg, and was escorted to the Jefferson hotel.

All the day police were on duty tonight about the hotel and theater. When the band engaged by Thompson marched down the street men bearing banners fell in behind them. Some of the banners said:

Hoots Drown Out Band.

There were dozens of such banners. The sound of the band was drowned out by the hoots of the crowds in front of the Jefferson, except when it played "The Star-Spangled Banner," when there was silence and every hat was doffed.

M. G. Severinghaus of Chicago attempted to invite the crowd to come to the theater and hear Thompson, but the sound of his voice was drowned by the hoots every time he attempted to speak. A howling mob followed the mayor from the hotel to the theater and hooted every one who had the courage to enter.

Park M. Puntney of Peoria acted as chairman of the meeting, but did not allude to the demonstration. Frank D. Ayres of Chicago made the first talk on Chicago municipal finances and Thompson's accomplishments. Thompson's remarks were devoted mainly to the Chicago newspapers and their attitude toward him.

O, HUM! THERE'S NOTHING NEW IN TOWN SINCE '39

C. F. Periolat Says Even Boy Problem Is Old Stuff.

"Our problems don't change much," said C. F. Periolat yesterday as he leaned back from his ancient black walnut desk in the Reliance building. "In the seventy-nine years I've lived in Chicago, it's always been the same things coming up over and over again.

"Take the city water proposition. They've been worrying about a fishy smell. I remember the first city water we ever had. The pipes were oak logs with a four inch hole bored in them, and it took all night to draw a tubful. In those days the waterworks were at the foot of Randolph street.

"I remember we had a moral problem, too. There was a place on old Michigan street, just east of where the Kirk soap factory is now, that was called 'The Sands.' Sailors used to go there a lot. Well, it caught fire one day at this end. The wind was blowing hard from the west, and 'Long John' Wentworth said to 'Let 'er burn.' Two blocks of houses went, and I was there watching 'em burn.

Also a Fuel Problem.

"Take the fuel problem, too. I remember my mother put a coal grate in her stove when they said they were going to have coal. The first coal was brought up from Ottawa. But mother didn't like it. She threw it out of the door and went back to wood.

"They're having a hard time getting steel now. I was born in a house at the southeast corner of Lake and Franklin streets in a house my father built out of black walnut. It was cut this side of North avenue, with hand saws.

"You might say we had our boy problem, too. One day Pete Schuettler, the wagon maker, and I were loafing around and we saw Mrs. Conrad Seipp put some pies in her oven. Pretty soon she went out of the kitchen and we swiped those pies. Don't do no harm to tell that now, I guess.

Boys Ran Away.

"We were a little older when we ran away, Pete, Bill Taylor, C. D. Peacock, and some more of us. We got as far as Urbana on our way to St. Louis. There we got a job at 50 cents a day moving a fellow's house. He thought the Illinois Central was going to run near the place, but it didn't, and he wanted to get over by the depot.

"They wouldn't let us shoot inside the limits, so we went down to Van Buren street for quail and partridge. If we got a nickel for quail and 10 cents for partridge we thought we were lucky. We used to get 3 cents for a muskrat hide and 5 cents for mink and skunk. Now a mink of the same class brings $10, a skunk $8, and a muskrat $1.50.

Meat a Mere Song.

"Speaking of the high cost of living, people only had to go to the slaughter house to get liver, kidneys, beef tongue, pigs' feet, and such things for nothing. Beef used to cost $3 a hundred for hind quarters. George Steele was the first packer, and he had a fine big house on Michigan avenue, next door to the bishop's, where the Tower building now stands.

"One of the show places was Bulger's saloon and grocery, in Bridgeport, where the Illinois and Michigan canal came in. They had prize fights there and the canal drivers enjoyed themselves. Ald. Ed. Cullerton used to work on the canal in the old days."

Mr. Periolat said he did not know who was the oldest living native of Chicago, but he thought that few could remember the early '40s as he does.

Pioneer Citizens Meet at Picnic Tomorrow

Pioneer residents of Chicago will assemble tomorrow at Brand's park, Belmont and Elston avenues, for the forty-fourth annual picnic of the old settlers' union. Gov. Lowden will be the chief speaker and guest of honor. The reception committee will be composed of Louis O. Kohts, Chicago resident since 1869; Adolf Georg Sr., since 1864, and William A. Hettich, since 1854. Oliver Townsend, a resident since 1837, and the oldest Chicago settler, will be unable to attend because of illness.

ALTON OFFICIAL TRANSFERRED.

Bloomington, Ill., Aug. 3.—X. H. Cornell, general superintendent of the Chicago and Alton railroad, with headquarters in this city, has been transferred to Chicago, where he will succeed C. W. Miller as head of the Chicago terminal. W. C. Hurst, late general manager of the Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis railroad, will take Mr. Cornell's place in Bloomington.

JAS. A. CLYBOURN, OLDEST NATIVE CHICAGOAN, DIES

Fatal Illness Follows Farewell to Soldier Grandson.

James A. Clybourn, whose title to the claim of being the oldest native born Chicagoan has not been successfully disputed, died early yesterday at the home of one of his daughters, Mrs. Frank J. Smith, 1544 Jonquil terrace.

Mr. Clybourn's decline in health followed quickly after the departure of his grandson, Lieut. Ernest Sawyer Smith, for the front. Lieut. Smith is in the ordnance department of the aviation corps and is now on his way to France.

Grandfather and grandson met for the last time July 10. Members of the family say that Mr. Clybourn did not regret the enlistment of his grandson, but that it was the parting that affected him, as the attachment between the two had been remarkably close.

Born Here in 1835.

Mr. Clybourn was born Oct. 14, 1835, and was 83 years old. Through an error the date of his birth had previously been reported as 1839. He was a son of Archibald Clybourn, who came to Chicago in 1823 and started the first slaughter house in this section, becoming known later as the "first king of the stockyards."

Archibald Clybourn lived first in a log cabin on Elston avenue, but later put up a brick house, which was the finest residence in Chicago at the time and was a landmark for years. This was the first brick building in Chicago. Archibald Clybourn's daughter Sarah is believed to have been the first white girl born in Chicago.

At Home to the Indians.

Surviving members of the family often have heard the late Mr. Clybourn tell of his father's friendship with the Indians in the early days. The door was open for them and they were allowed to make themselves at home. Their favorite method of doing this was to lie around on the floor within range of the fire.

Following in his father's steps James A. Clybourn had a butcher shop on North Clark street for a long time.

The surviving relatives of Mr. Clybourn are a sister, Mrs. Mary C. Parks, and a brother, William. There are also two daughters, Mrs. Frank J. Smith and Mrs. M. C. Bromilow. The funeral is to take place tomorrow at Rosehill.

GOMPERS GIVES INDORSEMENT TO LABOR DAY PLAN

Workers' Chief, Here Organizing Steel Men, Elated at Program.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, is in hearty accord with the plan first suggested by THE TRIBUNE to make this year's celebration of Labor day the greatest in labor's history, not only in Chicago but throughout the country. He is especially desirous that labor's celebration have the significance that the last convention of the American Federation of Labor asked be attached to it when it passed a resolution requesting that all Labor day celebrations this year adopt the slogan, "Win the War for Freedom."

Mr. Gompers, who has been here for several days to open a campaign for the organization of the steel industry, was enthusiastic over the plans thus far made for Chicago's federation.

Former Zest Lost.

"For the last few years," said Mr. Gompers, "the celebration of Labor day appears to have lost some of its former zest. This year, the first year in which we are actually 'in the war,' so far as active participation in it is concerned, labor should use its distinctive holiday for the purpose of intensifying its own and the national patriotic endeavor.

"This was the practically unanimous opinion of the last convention of the A. F. of L. in St. Paul in June, when it passed the resolution recommending the slogan to be adopted for Labor day everywhere, and also recommending that labor on that day exemplify its devotion to the nation's cause.

"I am particularly gratified at the steps which Chicago—the greatest industrial center in the country—has taken for the observance of the day, and at the manner in which the entire citizenry of the city has entered into the spirit of the thing. I am quite sure that other cities will follow Chicago's lead and that Labor day this year will be not only the greatest but the most patriotic demonstration of the workers throughout the country that the nation ever has known."

Official Action Today.

Simon O'Donnell, president of the Chicago Building Trades council, who has just returned from Washington, said he was gratified at the reception he had received and at the manner in which the plans of Chicago labor had been indorsed by high officials.

At today's meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor official action upon the celebration will be taken. A report upon the character of demonstration to be held will be submitted by the executive board of the federation, following instructions given by the last meeting of the body.

The organization of the steel industry is making definite progress, according to both Mr. Gompers, chairman, and William Z. Foster, secretary-treasurer of the committee of the affiliated trades unions having the matter in charge.

Twenty-two Unions Represented.

Twenty-two international unions in all were represented at the meeting held here, either by their presidents or secretaries, and at the next meeting to be held at the headquarters of the Chicago Federation of Labor Aug. 16 it is expected all of these international unions will send accredited delegates, who will thenceforth push the organizing of the industry, with its 1,000,000 men, vigorously.

The purpose of the organization of the industry is patriotic, according to John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor. It is desired to maintain such advances in working conditions as have already been procured, and, in such instances where the industry is backward in these respects to bring conditions to a par with other highly organized industries.

Wheatless days in America make sleepless nights in Germany.

DRIVE FOR LOAN OF SIX BILLIONS BEGINS SEPT. 28

Chicago Area Asked to Get $840,000,000 as Quota.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Get ready for the next Liberty loan. It will be $6,000,000,000, according to present indications, with interest at 4¼ per cent.

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo has called a series of conferences to be held in Washington soon to map out the plans for rolling up the biggest war loan in the history of the nation. But preparation is required also by every loyal and patriotic citizen of the country—preparation in saving and then saving more in order to purchase more bonds than hitherto. It is expected that fully one-fourth of the population will invest in the coming loan, beginning with Sept. 28.

Chicago's Huge Quota.

If the amount of the loan is fixed at $6,000,000,000 the Chicago federal reserve district will be required to take $840,000,000, the Minneapolis district $208,000,000, the St. Louis district $240,000,000, the Kansas City district $240,000,000, the Dallas district $144,000,000, and the San Francisco district $424,000,000.

Since congress has begun wrestling with the $8,000,000,000 war tax bill discussion of the equitable proportion of taxes to loans has been revived. Those who contend for larger bond issues and smaller tax levies usually argue that the present generation should not be burdened with the entire cost of the war. A committee of American economists headed by Irving Fisher of Yale university has recently made a report to Secretary McAdoo which asserts that the cost of the war cannot be shifted to future generations.

This Generation Responsible.

"There is a widespread idea," says the report, "that so far as the war is paid for out of loans its cost is shifted to the next generation and that only so far as it is paid for out of taxes does the cost fall on this generation. This is an error. The whole cost of waging the war falls necessarily on this generation alone, and cannot be shifted to the next generation by loans or any other device.

"This would be perfectly clear if there were no money or credit to confuse us. If we should wait for the next generation to provide the soldiers food, shoes, and guns, clearly our soldiers would go hungry, barefooted, and gunless and we should lose the war. This essential fact is not in the least altered because food, shoes, and guns are obtained through that convenient shuffler of goods, a circulating medium.

As Broad as Long.

"No one doubts this when the money is paid as taxes. But even when the money is paid as loans, the same principle holds true; for the next generation can never reimburse the present generation. It can only reimburse itself. When our descendants pay back the billions 'borrowed' today to carry on the war they are simply as taxpayers paying them back to themselves as bondholders. The money simply goes out of one pocket into another via the government treasury. The payment and receipt cancel themselves out.

"Some people are afraid that great loans will saddle the future with a crushing burden of taxes. We might just as well talk of great loans as a means of enriching the next generation by what their bonds will bring into them! It is exactly as broad as it is long. That is a chief reason why, after the war, a nation recuperates so fast as to astonish those who think of its war debt as a burden. When the war is over the cost of waging it is over, too.

Future's Tragic Heritage.

"Future generations will be saddled not with the burden of paying for the war but with the burden of disease, of shattered men, destroyed lands, forests, mines, and factories, for which the havoc of war is responsible.

"These conclusions hold when we view the country as a whole, or a generation as a whole, or when we look at the case of 'the average man.' It is when we view the distribution of the burden among individuals and among classes that the differences between loans and taxes begin to appear. If you subscribe to war bonds beyond your share of the burden today, your son or grandson may receive more as bondholder than he pays as taxpayer.

Poor Buying Bonds.

"Thus, if the rich finance the war by bonds, and if taxes after the war fall largely on the poor, the descendants of the rich may live on the interest and principal of bonds paid by the poor. This is a way by which in the past wars have often been financed.

"The opposite situation is possible, however, and is today actually more likely than ever before in history. The poor of this generation are buying many bonds; and in the next the rich will probably be heavily taxed, and so contribute to the millions of inheritors of small bonds.

Savings to Win War.

"From the standpoint of the purchasing power of money over goods, the important thing is not whether the tax policy or the loan policy is most used. The important thing is that the cost of the war should be paid as far as possible out of conscious savings and not out of borrowings. While a heavy tax policy helps toward this end, it could never of itself achieve it.

"The public should understand that lending by borrowing, though much better than nothing, is still a very unsatisfactory way to help the government. By raising prices such a procedure tends to shift the cost of the war to the poor, who pay it in a higher cost of living.

"But there is a further difference between taxes and loans which must not be overlooked. A policy of exclusive taxation would cut drastically into the earnings of many businesses and force them into bankruptcy. The creditors of these businesses would also be in danger of insolvency. And, apart from actual bankruptcy, doubt and timidity on the part of business men with reduced efficiency of industry would result."

TEN CENT MILK

Agreement Extends Life of "Cash and Carry" Stations.

THE "cash and carry" stations, at which milk can be bought at 10 cents a quart, have been saved through an agreement reached yesterday between Harry A. Wheeler, federal food administrator for Illinois, and the firms that handle milk. The 700 stations were on the point of being closed because it was impossible to get milk cheap enough so that it could be sold at 10 cents. The agreement covers the coming week, and will be extended over the remainder of August.

"During August and the first half of September there has always been a shortage of milk in the Chicago district," said Mr. Wheeler yesterday. "Dealers paid whatever prices the market warranted for this milk.

"In order to keep up the cash and carry plan in the congested districts it became necessary to fix the maximum price for the 'surplus,' or shortage of milk. After conferences with dealers and representatives of condensaries it has been agreed that, beginning on Monday, the maximum price of shortage milk shall not exceed 36 cents a gallon, during the coming week. Friday afternoon we are to adjust the price for the remainder of the month.

"So many milk cans have been lost, or stolen, that this item has become a factor in determining the cost of milk. Inspectors will search for the cans. Any one found with a can to which he has no right of ownership will be prosecuted and punished."

Girl Held as Unbalanced on Bank's Complaint

On complaint of officials of the Union Trust company Miss Edna Hamilton of 941 East Forty-seventh street was arrested yesterday and accused as mentally unbalanced. B. M. Stout, representing the trust company, said Miss Hamilton has been demanding $7,000 from the bank, claiming her account has been wrongly handled, whereas she has only $1 on deposit.

PLANS TO ALLOW TAX TO BE PAID BY INSTALLMENT

Steps Taken by U. S. to Spread Income and Excess Profit Returns.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Responsive to a general demand from the business men of the country, the ways and means committee, framing the new revenue bill, tentatively agreed today to a provision which will permit income taxes paid by corporations and excess profit taxes to be paid in installments instead of at one time, not later than June 15 of each year, as now prevails.

Ever since the imposition of the excess profit tax there has been a demand from corporations, banks, trust companies and big business men for the privilege of paying these taxes in installments. The matter was urged in congress several times, but was given no consideration by the ways and means committee until now.

Members of the committee finally have yielded to the suggestion and propose that a small interest rate shall be fixed for taxes paid in installments after June 15.

Four States Pay High.

Illinois, New York, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, the four largest industrial states, will have to pay three-fourths of the taxes to be levied under the new $8,000,000,000 war revenue bill as thus far tentatively drafted by the house ways and means committee.

This statement was made today by Representative J. Hampton Moore, Republican, of Pennsylvania, a member of the committee.

"And we haven't the votes to stop it," said Mr. Moore.

Wants Others Taxed More.

"These four large states," continued Mr. Moore, "are paying about that same proportion under the present law, but we hoped that in writing the new bill, the ways and means committee would reach out and find new sources of revenue for the billions of dollars of increased revenue that we need. The new bill is being written, however, with taxes on industries as its basis, and the four large industrial states have not enough votes on the ways and means committee to stop it."

According to Representative Moore, the four large industrial states would have to pay $6,000,000,000 of the $8,000,000,000 in taxes next year under the terms of the new revenue bill as it is being drafted.

Southern States Exempt.

The southern states, he pointed out, having few industries, would be exempt from virtually all taxation except the income tax.

The excise taxes on the use of automobiles and upon the commodities that the house committee is considering taxing also would hit the populous manufacturing states harder than the rest of the country, he added.

Representative Moore also said that the materials out of which clothing and luxuries are made will be taxed instead of a direct tax being levied on the sale of the articles themselves. Such a tax would be collected from the manufacturer and passed on to the consumer in the form of an increased price to be paid for each article.

Plan Luxuries Tax.

A 10 per cent tax on retail sales of a wide variety of commonly classified luxuries, from jewelry to merschaum pipes, and from smoking jackets to silk hosiery, will be recommended to the full house ways and means committee Monday as the result of today's deliberations of the subcommittee on luxuries. The semi-luxuries, goods which are in the class where it is difficult to distinguish between the real necessity and the real luxury, such as clothing, will be left to a more searching inquiry.

BATTLING WIFE IS AGAIN IN CUSTODY

Louis Luther, 6747 South Peoria street, night watchman at the rooms of the State Council of Defense, 120 West Adams street, and his wife, sometimes do not agree.

Some time ago, as the result of a domestic tilt, Mrs. Luther was haled before Judge Harry M. Fisher at the South Clark street court and placed under $200 bonds to restrain her from beating her husband.

Last night the Central police received a call from the State Council of Defense and hurrying there found Mrs. Luther once more on the rampage.

According to the husband, they had quarreled at home and she had followed him to work to finish the argument.

Mrs. Luther decided that flight was better than valor, but after a chase she was captured by Patrolman Martin Helberg and, protesting vocally and physically, she was placed in the wagon and taken once more to the South Clark street station. Tomorrow she will appear again before Judge Fisher charged with disorderly conduct.

Fourth Fraud Charge Filed Against Broker

A fourth charge of obtaining money through the operation of a confidence game was filed yesterday against Willard R. Barnet of 4900 Sheridan road, formerly head of the investment brokerage firm of that name at 208 South La Salle street. The complainant is Max Pruzinski of 957 Milwaukee avenue. The three other charges were filed July 13, the complainants being S. D. Sober of 6155 Kenwood avenue; William Bierkamp of room 1219 First National Bank building; and Bert Johnson of 749 East Forty-third street. The complainants allege Barnet sold them worthless stock.

YANK VOLPLANES INTO ROMANCE AND $1,000,000

Now He's in Paris to Get Photographs to Send Heiress.

A hint of romance over there comes to Chicago in a letter written by one of the Chicago soldiers in France to a personal friend, under date of June 30. It says:

"One of the Chicago boys—been in business in Chicago for a couple of years, his home is in some petite Wisconsin town—was telling me a story this morning.

"You see, while we are waiting—always waiting, it seems—for planes we are doing ferry work from England to Paris, bringing over planes purchased by the U. S. A. On one of these trips George 'panned'—i. e., his motor went 'dud'—and he had to land. The common custom under such circumstances is to pick out a beautiful chateau if there is one within gliding distance. This George did.

In Lot of Luxury.

"It happened that the lady of the palace in the middle of 400 acres is the wife of a French commandant or major, and her uncle is the mayor of Paris. She has beaucoup de dough, too. She took George in and there he stayed for four days and nights while he was making arrangements for the shipping of his plane, which he had cracked up pretty badly by knocking down three rods of the palace's cement fence.

"Besides having breakfast in his room, his puttees and boots shined each morning by his servant, jogs in the commandant's dog cart behind a thoroughbred belonging to the commandant, and all the fine food and wine he could surround

Here's the Romance.

"But here is the kick of it in George's words:

"'I got pretty clubby with her over coffee and liquor before an open fire after dinners and finally she asked me if I was engaged. I told her that I was not. She said, "Now, I know just the girl for you. She is 19, very attractive, speaks perfect English, and is heir to 5,000,000 francs. She is now at the sea shore, but I want you to have some good pictures made at once. Send two to me, one for myself and one to show to the girl's parents, and I am sure that if I approve of you the girl's parents will.'

"First Lieutenant George P. Kull, A. S. Sig. R. C., is now busy as a bee with a half dozen Paris photographers."

SUGAR IN PICKLES AND TELEPHONES MAKES SHORTAGE

Food Administration Finds Tobacco Industry Cuts Supply.

Where does all the sugar go?

Answers to this question are coming to the food administration from most unexpected quarters. Charles Stevenson, head of the sugar division, has been conducting an inquiry, in order to find out why the allotment for Illinois melts away so fast.

"The food administration is getting new light every day regarding the multitude of uses to which sugar is put," said Mr. Stevenson yesterday. "We have just found that one tobacco concern in Chicago has 1,500,000 pounds of sugar, a large part of which is refined. I suppose it is used for sweetening chewing tobacco, which is hardly an essential.

"Hereafter, when any tobacco firm wants sugar it must send its request to W. R. Perkins, 511 Fifth avenue, New York. This will release a large amount of sugar for necessary uses.

"We have found that a single firm at the stockyards had been using 500,000 pounds of sugar a month.

"Another concern wants 300,000 pounds of sugar to use in putting up sweet pickles, but when we held that sweet pickles were not essentials, the firm agreed to go out of the pickle business for the time being.

"Large amounts of sugar are used in baby food. It is also used in insecticides. We found that makers of boiler cleaning compounds want large amounts. Another discovery was that the transmitters of telephones contain a large amount of sugar."

Neglect of Feet Causes Bad Health

Foot troubles affect the body in many different ways. The feet swell, burn, ache, and have sharp pains under heels. The ball of the foot is sore and feels as if walking on marbles. Ankles become weak, legs cramp and knees stiffen when ascending stairs. Pains are produced in hips, small of back, shoulders and neck. Poor circulation, inability to walk with comfort.

I can absolutely relieve you of all your foot troubles. Now let me prove to you the cause and cure of all foot troubles. No charge for examination.

The AEOLIAN-VOCALION

UNLIKE ANY OTHER PHONOGRAPH—
A NEW MUSICAL INSTRUMENT

THE AEOLIAN-VOCALION will interest every phonograph owner since it represents such a remarkable advance in phonograph development.

It will interest those also who never have considered the phonograph seriously—the Vocalion tone is so clear, pure, so artistically perfect that it wins the admiration and respect of those qualified to judge music critically.

The wonderful expression device—the Graduola—quite doubles the appeal of the phonograph. For it grants literally the privilege of singing with voices of the greatest vocalists, playing with the tone of the most famous instrumentalists.

Come into Aeolian Hall for a fifteen minute test. Therein is conclusive proof of Vocalion supremacy.

Vocalion prices are $50 to $350; Graduola styles from $115; Catalogue and complete information sent upon request.

CHILD'S LIFE IN SCALES AGAINST FATHER'S SLAYER

Mother Prefers Help to Revenge, but State May Prevent.

A widowed mother had to choose. She could prosecute a man for murder and be revenged for the slaying of her husband. Or she could take $1,500 in settlement that would save the life of her daughter, dying of tuberculosis.

Mrs. Jeremiah McDonald took the latter course, according to her attorney, Francis McDonnell. But then fate stepped in, upsetting this plan. When McDonnell made her choice known to State's Attorney Hoyne he declared it was not for the mother or the prosecutor to decide.

So, on Sept. 10, when "Wild Jack" Bacon, former policeman, is arraigned on charges of murdering his "pal," Jerry McDonald, while drunk, it will be for Judge Sabath in the Criminal court to say which shall triumph—the mother in her effort to save her daughter or the dignity of the state of Illinois.

On Jan. 21 Bacon and McDonald, friends for twenty years, were drinking together in Welch's saloon at 85 West Randolph street. There was an argument over the "meatless Monday order" then in vogue. Bacon drew revolver and pointed it at his friend.

Second Bullet Kills.

McDonald slapped the weapon up and the bullet went into the ceiling. Then Bacon thrust the revolver at his companion's neck. Again McDonald attempted to brush it away, but this time the bullet crashed through his mouth. He died three weeks later.

Bacon was arrested and indicted. Judge McGoorty set the bond at $15,000. Seven times his case has been continued and Bacon has been out on bonds.

Meanwhile Mrs. McDonald has had a rather hard time making both ends meet. Her husband's death left her with two children, Henry, 4 years old, and Geraldine, 8. Geraldine, according to McDonnell, has been confined almost constantly for the last six months with tuberculosis. Physicians at Mercy hospital told the mother that nothing but a change of climate would help the child and they suggested Arizona. But Mrs. McDonald, barely able to make a living by working, could not see where the money for the expensive trip would come.

Makes Deal With Slayer.

The widowed mother then appealed to Bacon for help. He agreed to mortgage his home at 1532 Plaisance court for $1,500 and give it to her upon condition that she would not press the murder charge. This being agreed, the case was placed before State's Attorney Hoyne, who answered that he had no right to nolle pros a murder charge. He offered to present the facts to the judge, however, when the case is called.

Meanwhile Mrs. McDonald fears for the life of her daughter.

"Yes," said Mrs. McDonald, "my little girl must be taken to another climate or she will die. The doctor says that is her only hope. I want to save my child and I haven't the money, and so I have agreed to ask the judge to be lenient with Mr. Bacon if he will help me.

"My husband has been dead six months now and I have been working, trying to earn the money to send Geraldine away—but it's terribly discouraging.

"I really believe Mr. Bacon must have been crazed with drink when he shot Jerry, and two wrongs don't make a right, nor would another death or punishment bring Jerry back nor save my Geraldine.

"The only solution of the problem I can see is for Bacon to plead guilty," said Mr. Hoyne. "Then Mrs. McDonald's appeal to the judge might help him."

CALLS TRUSTEES OF $2,000,000 ESTATE UNFIT

Mrs. Helen S. Pearson Asks Removal of Co-Executors.

Mrs. Helen S. Pearson, 6222 Sheridan road, widow of Walter Beverly Pearson, late president of the Standard Screw company of New Jersey, yesterday filed a petition in the Circuit court asking that William F. Cooper and Carl S. Jefferson be removed as co-executors and trustees, with Mrs. Pearson, of her husband's estate of more than $2,000,000. Cooper and Jefferson are "unsuitable and unfit to act as trustees," the petition asserts.

Legacies Unpaid, She Says.

According to the terms of the will the widow is given an annual income of $50,000, $12,000 a year is given the son, Frederick B. Pearson, while the daughter, Beatrice, is to receive "a just and reasonable amount," to be determined by the trustees. These legacies, Mrs. Pearson asserts, Cooper and Jefferson have refused to pay.

Her co-executors, the widow says, retained H. G. Colson as attorney for the estate without her consent. They also charged, she asserts, an exorbitant fee for their services and those of Colson. According to the complainant's bill, $150,000 was asked for executors' fees, while Colson was awarded $50,000 for his services.

Protested Against Fees.

Mrs. Pearson says in her bill that she protested against these fees, but upon being told that they would be fixed by the court, finally signed the executors' account. Later, she says, she filed a supplementary report. She also offered to return the check for $50,000, given her as executor, to the estate, she says, but was dissuaded from doing so by Cooper and Jefferson.

Most of the estate, according to the widow's bill, consists of stock in the Standard Screw company, of which Pearson was principal stockholder. The remainder is said to consist chiefly of "other conservative stocks." There is said to be practically no real estate, the only piece being "one vacant lot of insignificant value in the city of Chicago."

MASON RALLIES FROM ILLNESS

Galesburg, Ill., Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Congressman at Large William E. Mason is still confined to his bed at the Custer hotel from the effects of his sudden attack of illness, although Dr. J. H. Bryant, the attending physician, says tonight he can return to Chicago in a day or two.

The congressman made a speech last night at the armory in favor of his candidacy for the Republican nomination and went to the hotel at a late hour. He was taken ill with intestinal poisoning shortly after reaching the hotel. His condition was regarded as serious. Vigorous measures were taken and improvement was marked during the day. When the doctor called tonight Mason was sleeping and the temperature had returned to normal.

The congressman said that he had suffered occasionally from similar attacks of late years. His family was notified and some member is expected this evening.

Sanction Asked for Paris 'Chicago Hospital' Drive

The city council at its meeting tomorrow will be asked to sanction a drive for funds Sept. 24 for the Paris "Chicago hospital" foundation. Subscriptions will be obtained in Chicago and throughout the state for the building and equipping of a hospital in Paris to be named after Chicago as "an after the war memorial and gift to France from the citizens of Chicago and of Illinois for the purpose of commemorating the fight for liberty and democracy being made by the sons of France and the United states."

A letter embodying the request was received yesterday by City Clerk James T. Igoe. The letter explains that every penny contributed will be used directly for the purpose intended; that the expenses of the organizations are being borne by its supporters.

Marriage an Inadequate Reason for Passport Now

Would be brides evidently have been feeling the stress of war times recently, nearly a dozen applications for passports from young women having been refused during the last two weeks, it was stated at the passport department in the federal building yesterday.

RAID REVEALS 'DOCTOR' FORMER YARDS WORKER

Inspectors from the state board of registration and education yesterday raided the office of "Dr." B. P. Maza, at 7141 South Paulina street, where some fifteen patients were found undergoing various phases of the "doctor's" treatments.

Among the patients was Andro Pzizak of 1436 West Thirty-eighth street, who was being bled for insanity. The method used was rubber cups. Otherwise it did not differ from the old-fashioned leech method.

Maza was arrested on a charge of practicing medicine without a license. He told the inspectors that he formerly worked in the Chicago stockyards, but that he tired of the work and entered the American College of Mechano Therapy at 81 West Randolph street, being graduated in August of 1915. The head of the college is Dr. W. J. La Boy of 1509 Kedzie avenue, he said. The inspectors will question Dr. La Boy as to why he sent patients to an unlicensed man, they said.

Maza's books showed he was doing a business of about $1,500 a month, the inspectors say. Their attention was first attracted to him by reason of a cough mixture, a stomach remedy and a salve which he had patented and marketed, and for which he made strong claims in his advertisements.

CAPT. E. A. EVERS COMMANDS NAVY SCHOOL ON PIER

Auxiliary Reserve to Be Increased by 242,000 Officers and Men.

Through the office of Capt. Moffett, commanding the naval district, orders were issued yesterday assigning Capt. E. A. Evers to the command of the naval auxiliary reserve school for the merchant fleet on the municipal pier. Within the last three months the number of men in the school has increased from about 400 to more than a thousand.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels has announced that all the merchant ships used for navy purposes will be manned and officered by the navy and that 220,000 men and 22,000 officers will be required for that service. That insures the continued and rapid growth of the school and will shortly make it necessary to take over the rest of the space on the municipal pier or else necessitate the removal of the school to larger quarters elsewhere.

Capt. Evers retains, in addition to his new duties, the command of the training ship, U. S. S. Commodore. He also has under his charge the work of supervising the work of reconstructing the former lake steamers Virginia, Puritan, City of South Haven, Theodore Roosevelt and Eastland.

For Channel Service.

The first four will be completed early this fall and will then be sent across the Atlantic to serve as troop transports in the channel service. They will carry American soldiers across the English channel to the battlefields of France.

It was originally planned to use the remodeled Eastland as a training ship for sailors on the great lakes. Recently, however, it has been decided to use the Wilmette, which is the new name of the old craft, as a gunboat. Within a few days the officers and crew assigned to the Wilmette have arrived in Chicago.

Commander W. B. Wells will be in command of the Wilmette. He and his staff and crew formerly served on the U. S. S. Schurz, which was sunk in a collision with a tank steamer. Their transfer to the Wilmette was not welcomed.

Change Their Minds.

"We have just left one wreck," said one of the officers on arriving in Chicago. "Let's go and look at the other."

After inspecting the remodeled Wilmette, however, it is understood that Commander Wells and his men are delighted with the prospect of going to sea in what is expected to prove one of the fastest and stanchest gunboats in the American navy.

CAMPS TO MAKE 100 PCT. CITIZENS PLAN OF WOMEN

Train Young in Their Duties to the Country.

Federal training of all those under the voting age so they may become proficient in handling the problems of citizenship is being urged by members of the Chicago Woman's club and other women's organizations in connection with women's war activities over the nation.

The idea of training the young in national thought is the result of a suggestion made by Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen, chairman of the woman's committee of the Illinois division of the National Council of Defense. The purpose of the idea is to eradicate the weak spots in our national life under such heads as alien influence, physical deficiency, crime, ignorance of hygiene, ineffective education, vocational waste, personal inefficiency, group selfishness, and civic duties.

Physical Defects Remedied.

The fact that from 30 to 60 per cent of the draft registrants have been found physically defective is regarded as another argument for the improvement of breadwinners and citizens. It is the hope of the women to establish the training camp idea as a cure. In this respect it is considered that 50 per cent of mental defectives who drift into lives of crime can be set straight in open air camps.

Another use of the short federal course would be to eliminate a great per cent of the ignorance shown in the fact that out of the 18,528,743 votes in the last presidential election 2,000,000 were illiterate.

Aided to Find Vocations.

In the matter of vocational training it is pointed out that training camps will aid young people to find vocations to which they are best suited. Also the camps would establish a community of interest and eliminate the group lines of cleavage.

BEWARE OF PEACE OFFENSIVE, SAYS COL. ROOSEVELT

Glorious Allied Victory on Marne May Bring Sinister Drive.

BY THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

[Published by courtesy of the Kansas City Star.]

The glorious victory of the allies in the second battle of the Marne, a victory in which the hard fighting soldiers of the American army have borne so distinguished and honorable a part, may mean the failure of the German military offensive for this year.

Therefore it may mean a renewal of the German peace offensive. No man can prophesy in these matters, but the Germans may continue the war for a long time, and therefore we should prepare to have in France an army of 4,000,000 fighting men for the battle front next spring. But the Germans may try to make peace instead of continuing the war and may seek to cover their retention of some of their ill gotten substantial gains by nominal and theoretical support of some glittering proposal about a league of nations to end all war.

They will thereby hope to keep part of their booty by appealing to what is vaguely called internationalism and getting the support not only of sentimentalists who do not like to look unpleasant facts in the face but also of the good people who are appalled and puzzled and panic struck by the horror Germany has brought on the world and who, instead of bracing themselves to put down this horror by their own hardened strength and iron will, clutch at any quack remedy which false prophets hold out as offering a substitute for such action.

Horse Sense Needed.

Therefore it is well at this time for sober and resolute men and women to apply that excellent variety of wisdom colloquially known as "horse sense" to the problems of nationalism and internationalism. These problems will not be solved by rhetoric. Least of all will they be solved by competitive rhetoric. Masters of phrase making may win immense although evanescent applause by outvying one anothing in words that gliter, but these glittering words will not have one shred of lasting effect on the outcome except in so far as they may have a very mischievous effect if they persuade people to abandon the possible real good in the fantastic effort to achieve an impossible unreal perfection.

Let honest men and women remember that this kind of phrase mongering does not represent idealism. The only idealism worth considering in the workaday business of this world is applied idealism. This is merely another way of saying that permanent good to humanity only comes from actually trying to reduce ideals to practice, and this means that the ideals must be substantially or at least measurably realizable.

Sneer at Nationalism.

The professed internationalist usually sneers at nationalism, at patriotism, and at what we call Americanism. He bids us forswear our love of country in the name of love of the world at large. We nationalists answer that he has begun at the wrong end; we say that as the world now is, it is only the man who ardently loves his country first who in actual practice can help any other country at all. The internationalist bids us to promise to abandon the idea of keeping America permanently ready to defend her rights by her strength and to trust, instead, to scraps of paper, to written agreements by which all nations form a league and agree to disarm and agree each to treat all other nations, big or little, on an exact equality.

We nationalists answer that we are ready to join any league to enforce peace or similar organization which offers a likelihood of in some measure lessening the number and the area of future wars, but only on condition that in the first place we do not promise what will not or ought not to be performed, or be guilty of proclaiming a sham, and that in the second place we do not surrender our right and duty to prepare our own strength for our own defense instead of trusting to the above mentioned scraps of paper. In justification we point to certain very obvious facts which ought to be patent to every man of common sense.

Nine Army Powers.

Any such league of nations must, of course, include the nine nations which have a greatest military strength or it will be utterly impotent. These nine nations include Germany, Austria, Turkey, and Russia. The first three have abundantly shown during the last four years that no written or other promise of the most binding kind has even the slightest effect upon their actions. The fourth, Russia, under the lead and dominion of the Bolshevists, has just been guilty of the grossest possible betrayal of her allies and of the small kindred Slavonic peoples and of world democracy.

This betrayal was in the interest of a military and despotic autocracy and included the direct violation of Russia's plighted faith. Under such conditions it is unnecessary to say that Russia's signature to any future league to enforce peace will not be worth the paper on which it is written. Therefore the creation of any such league for the future will simply mean a pledge by the present allies to make their alliance perpetual and all to go to war again whenever one of them is attacked. This may become necessary, but it certainly does not imply future disarmament.

Refers to China.

All things point to how utterly futile it would be to try to treat a league to enforce peace as a substitute for training our own strength for our own defense. Let China be the witness of the truth of this statement. China has actually realized the ideal of the pacifists who insist that unpreparedness for war secures peace. The ideal of the internationalists is that patriotism and sense of nationalism are detrimental to humanity, and the ideal of the Socialists is that the capitalist régime is the only cause of popular misery.

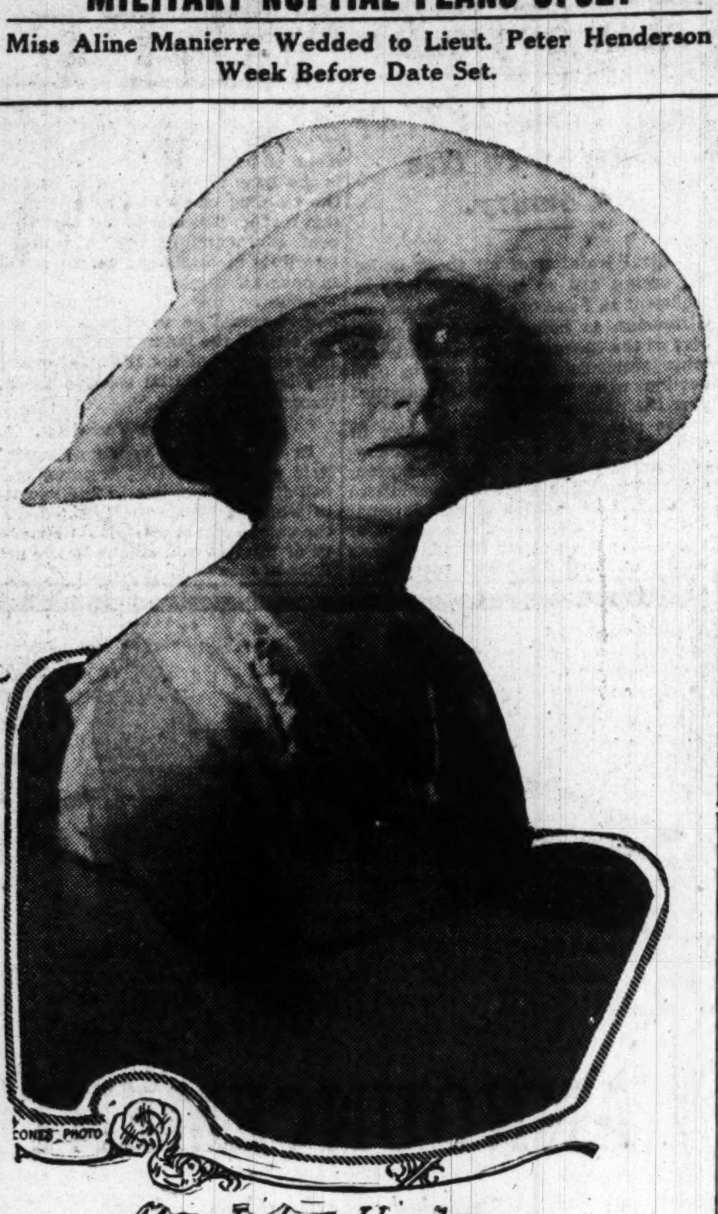
SHELL EXPLODES; EIGHT HURT.

Newark, N. J., Aug. 3.—Five women and three men were injured today when an eight inch shell exploded while government inspectors were making a test of the fuse in the testing room of the Ferdinando C. Mess shell loading plant at Irvington

MILITARY NUPTIAL PLANS UPSET

Miss Aline Manierre Wedded to Lieut. Peter Henderson Week Before Date Set.



Mrs. Peter Henderson

Family plans for a military wedding were upset yesterday when news was received of the marriage of Miss Aline Manierre of 1507 North Dearborn street to Lieut. Peter Henderson of New York, just a week ahead of the formal date announced.

William R. Manierre, father of the bride, had planned to leave in a few days for San Antonio, and Mrs. William Brown Jr., sister of the bride, is on a train on the way to take part in the nuptials.

Mrs. Henderson has been visiting for several months with her sister, who is the wife of Lieut. R. Boynton Rogers, a fellow officer of Lieut. Henderson in the air corps. The cause of the hurried wedding was an order directing Lieut. Rogers to leave immediately for San Diego, Cal.

INVESTIGATION OF GIRL'S DEATH HALTS FUNERAL

Misunderstandings following the death of Miss Ethel Florence Baalack of 5106 North Dakin street, caused a temporary delay, almost a postponement, of the funeral yesterday. Miss Baalack died in the Illinois Eye and Ear hospital while under an anesthetic and about to be operated upon for the removal of tonsils.

An immediate autopsy disclosed novocaine poisoning as the cause of death. The novocaine was administered as a local anesthetic and it is believed the young woman's resistance was not sufficient to withstand the application.

Upon a report to the coroner's office an investigation was made of the "poisoning case." By this time the funeral was in progress from the home of the young woman's parents. Agents of the coroner interrupted proceedings until it was explained the lethal dose had been administered in a surgical operation. The procession then moved to Mount Olive.

Return Fugitive Charged with Attempt to Kill Girl

Frank McErlane, wanted in Chicago on a charge of attempting to kill Grace Lytle, was brought back to the city yesterday by Detective Sergeant John Murphy of the state's attorney's office from Los Angeles. Miss Lytle was the star witness for the state in the trial of Lloyd Bopp.

SAYS DR. RUMELY PAID GERMANY'S AGENTS IN U. S.

Becker Charges Big Sums Went to Spies on Crops and War Plants.

New York, Aug. 3.—The German government paid several hundred thousand dollars to agents in this country before the United States entered the war, in return for information regarding American munitions and crops, according to a statement made today by Alfred L. Becker, deputy state attorney general, who is investigating expenditures of Teuton funds in America.

Evidence which has been obtained through the inquiry indicates, Mr. Becker said, that the money reached these agents through Dr. Edward A. Rumely, who was indicted by a federal jury here yesterday, on a charge of perjury in connection with the alleged German purchase of the New York Evening Mail.

Large sums were placed by the German government at the disposal of Dr. Rumely, Mr. Becker said the evidence shows, in addition to the money expended for the Mail stock.

$1,589,200 to Rumely?

Pay to Dr. Rumely from funds of Dr. Heinrich Albert, former commercial attache of the German embassy, aggregated $1,589,200, according to the deputy attorney general.

Of this sum the former publisher of the Mail used $1,481,700, largely in the purchase and conduct of his newspaper, it is alleged, while the balance was turned over by him to Louis N. Hammerling, president of the Association of Foreign Language Newspapers and head of a New York advertising agency.

With some of this money, Mr. Becker charged, Hammerling placed advertisements in English language newspapers in a campaign conducted in 1915 against shipment of American made munitions to the allies.

The deputy attorney general also announced that Leo Wallerstein, head of the Wallerstein laboratories in this city, acted as a go-between in transmitting funds from Dr. Albert to Dr. Rumely. Wallerstein, receiving $75,000 in currency from S. Walter Kaufmann, indicted with Rumely in the Mail case, made payment to Rumely through a lawyer. Wallerstein told the authorities he was ignorant of its source.

Gruening Sues N. Y. Tribune.

Dr. Ernest H. Gruening, who ceased to be managing editor of the New York Tribune after his name had been mentioned in connection with that of Dr. Rumely, filed suit in the Supreme court today against the New York Tribune for $32,850 for breach of contract. He alleged that he was discharged without cause on July 12.

U. S. to Get Shank's Charge.

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 3.—Information gathered by local federal authorities relative to statements by Samuel Lewis Shank, former mayor of Indianapolis, that he had been offered employment on the staff of the New York Evening Mail to travel over the country as a crop and market investigator, has been forwarded to Washington, the federal officials announced here today.

According to Shank, he was offered $12,000 a year for the work.

6 Cent Car Fares in Prospect for Evanston

Evanston will have 6 cent street railway fares, and probably before Chicago does, according to Frank H. McCulloch, attorney for the Evanston railway company. "If the newspaper accounts of the war labor board decision are borne out by official notice, an increase in the fare is imperative," he said yesterday.

BEG YOUR PARDON!

In THE TRIBUNE of Aug. 2 there was published in the list of names under a picture of the staff officers of the Blackhawk division that of Lieut. Col. Charles C. Burt. It should have been Charles C. Berg.

Reference in THE TRIBUNE of Saturday to the government's wish to save ammonia now used for making the ice in ice skating rinks brought a letter from Harry Moir of the Morrison hotel saying that the ice in the Terrace garden is made by carbon dioxide, the use of which as a refrigerant in place of ammonia is approved by the food administration.

LACK OF QUORUM DELAYS START OF GAS RAISE FIGHT

Only Two Aldermen at Meeting to Outline Course of Action.

Lack of a quorum yesterday of the city council committee on gas litigation prevented any action being taken toward laying down a definite program for the city's injunction proceedings against the carrying out of the order of the state public utilities commission for a 27½ per cent increase in rates for the Peoples Gas Light and Coke company.

Only Ald. H. D. Capitain and Harry E. Littler answered the roll call. It was decided to call another meeting of the committee for Tuesday noon to hear from Donald R. Richberg, the city's special counsel in gas matters.

Form of Fight Undecided.

It has been definitely agreed that the city will fight the order, but just what form this will take must be outlined by the committee. Mr. Richberg said he believed petitions for writs of injunction should be asked against both the company and the commission.

The committee also was to have taken up the strike of the accountants employed by the city in the gas litigation suits. These men have not been paid for the last three and one-half months. The city law department has refused to approve their vouchers unless certain changes are made in the manner of setting up the pay roll.

Test Suit to Be Filed.

The law department yesterday approved vouchers for the attorneys and engineers employed in the work. The money was paid to the men, amounting to about $32,000. It was understood that Mr. Richberg will sue the city to recover approximately $1,000 for his services. He was paid all but this sum and the suit will be to settle the point as to whether the council has the right to employ special counsel. The city law department contends that it has not this right.

DIES ON WAY TO HOSPITAL.

James Martin, 61 years old, 538 Sacramento avenue, a foreman employed in the construction of a building at 818 South May street, died of heart disease yesterday on the way to the Columbus Extension hospital.

PLAN TO BRING TRACTION PLAN TO VOTE AT ONCE

Counsel for City and Lines Put On Final Touches.

Attorneys for the city and the traction companies spent most of yesterday putting the finishing touches to the proposed ordinance for the unification of the surface and elevated lines and a subway system.

The ordinance is scheduled to be presented to the local transportation committee of the city council tomorrow morning. The plan is to submit it to the council in the same afternoon.

Scaling Down Securities.

Walter L. Fisher, the city's special counsel in traction affairs; Leonard A. Busby, president of the surface lines; and Gilbert E. Porter, general counsel for the elevated interests, worked until late yesterday in trying to devise a plan for scaling down the securities of the two systems to meet the provisions of the ordinance.

The ordinance provides that the securities of the systems shall be based on the agreed valuation and shall be on a 60 and 40 per cent basis, the latter stock and the former bonds. The outstanding securities of the systems now amount to far more than the agreed valuation.

Seek Final Action.

The present scheme is to submit the ordinance at tomorrow's meeting of the council and ask for final action on it a week later. The council has delayed its summer vacation for more than a month so as to pass on the matter before the vacation period.

If the council approves the ordinance it will be submitted to the voters at the November election for approval. The traction interests and the transportation committee have agreed on the principal points, but the ordinance as a whole is yet to be approved by the committee. It is believed it will have the committee's approval tomorrow.

The Future Value of Lands Near Chicago Knows No Limit

The farmer's acres are veritable gold mines—his dollars are coming in fast and he has money—not only for necessities, but for luxuries. The man who owns a few fertile acres near Chicago today has a wonderfully profitable safe investment. Chicago is the heart of the richest area in the Middle West. Chicago is the center of the nation's transportation, a gigantic manufacturing and merchandising center. With war orders coming in at a tremendous rate, and new factories going up, new homes must be built and more food must be provided. Chicago's population is extending to the west, into Cook County's Garden Spot, where they can live on a few acres and raise their own food.

LONGWOOD FARMS Are Today Just Beyond Chicago's City Limits
45 Minutes from the Loop

Longwood—Tomorrow!

Longwood Farms will bring big profits to their owners. Each Longwood Farm will cut up into 48 city lots, includng four corners. Think what this means! Today unimproved subdivisions are selling for $250 a lot for inside property and from $1,500 up for business corners—an average generally of better than $350 a lot. Now consider Longwood Farms—48 lots at this figure—and there is no question about their value—would net their purchaser $16,800—a net profit on the investment of over 1,000%.

Longwood Farms, per acre as low as $325 an acre and upwards. Terms: 1-5 Cash; balance in 6 years

Every 5 acres contains 48 city lots, including four corners, 1,200 feet of frontage—5 acres at $1,625 means that you are paying $34 a lot, or only $1.40 per foot for future Chicago property.

Call or phone our main office, 140 So. Dearborn Street, any week-day and we will take you to the property. Come out today to our Longwood office on 95th St., opposite the Rock Island suburban depot, and we will take you by automobile to Longwood Farms—10 minutes' ride.

Write or Call for "Country Life in the City"

It describes Longwood Farms and their relationship to Chicago's future development. It tells you—by facts—the future of Chicago as a money-maker for you in real estate. It presents the economic advantages of suburban life. Send for it now—use the coupon.

CHICAGO STILL SUMMER RESORT; TEMPERATURE 73

Cooling Breezes Here While Other Parts of U. S. Swelter.

Here, for the first time, is the truth about Chicago, so help us Lake Breeze. First of all let us set out this figure, in a separate line, big type, in three ways, so we won't forget.

Seventy-three! 73! LXXIII!

Seventy-three was the highest temperature in Chicago yesterday on the third day of August, Anno Domini 1918.

Out in Los Angeles, where the climate is a feature, the mercury at one time yesterday registered 100. The day started cooler than that and ended less hot, but the maximum was 100 degrees flat.

But in Chicago.

In Chicago it was 73!

In Kansas City, where the citizens claim to have an inside on coolth, in a manner of speaking, the temperature was as high as 108 in the more severe moments.

Now then, Chicago, seventy-three!

Concordia, Kas., started out with a low of 70, but gosh, why take any comfort in 70 when in a few hours the old bean begins to sizzle like scrambled eggs under the beating of a sun that is registering 100. Then there was St. Louis with 96 and Springfield with 94 degrees.

Same Old Resort.

But—Chicago's 73, with the breeze of the lake and a sparkle in the sunlit air, was the same old world's greatest summer resort.

P. S.—It may be warmer today, but if it is the fault starts with those western regions aforesaid.

NINE I. W. W. MEN GIVEN LIBERTY; REASON, ILLNESS

Nine of the 101 I. W. W. leaders on trial before Federal Judge Landis were released on their own recognizance at the close of yesterday's session, and three others were allowed freedom from jail life over Sunday. The action does not dismiss any of them as defendants, however, the nine being allowed their liberty because of illness and upon the assurance of their attorneys that they will make no attempt to escape.

The nine allowed their freedom for the remainder of the trial are R. J. Bobba, Globe, Ariz.; Alton E. Soper, Astoria, Ore.; James H. Manning, Fresno, Cal.; J. P. Baskett, Jerome, Ariz.; Charles H. McKinnon, Salt Lake, Utah; H. J. Kane, Globe, Ariz.; C. R. Griffin, Seattle, Wash.; Pete McElroy, San Francisco, and John M. Foss, Seattle.

Evanston Cat Wears Bell to Prevent Robin Killing

"Rusty" is a cat, a long haired Persian kitten with a longer pedigree—and lives in Evanston. Now in Evanston cats have been getting a great deal of attention lately—from all sorts of organizations, from the local Council of Defense, to the neighborhood literary society, and the future status has been very precarious.

"Rusty" didn't know this when it slew the four robins; but "Rusty's" mistress did, so she tied a big bell around its neck. Now its mistress, who is Miss Elenore Whiteside, 1877 Wesley avenue, thinks that she has solved the cat problem—and "Rusty" can catch no more robins.

ON GUARD

Miss Catherine Lyon
STAFFORD PHOTO

Should a nurse-life guard wear a nurse's uniform or a bathing suit?

This is the question in the minds of people interested in Clarendon beach. Recently a nurse-life guard, Miss Ethel Duppler, was appointed for the beach. She was only here a few days when she accepted an offer to become assistant head nurse in the city hospital of Columbus, O.

Miss Catherine Lyon, 2254 Sunnyside avenue, was appointed to her place. The answer to the question remains with her, and it will be demonstrated to the public Monday morning when Miss Lyon goes on duty.

But—for those whose curiosity will not allow them a quiet Sunday's rest—it has been ascertained that the new guardian of public health and safety will be clad in the costume of a nurse.

WAITER (FOR JOB) FINED AS "BO"

Judge Wells N. Cook in the Desplaines street police court yesterday fined sixteen "bos" on charges of disorderly conduct and discharged thirty. Among those appearing before the court was Ben Herns, 42 years old, "of nowhere in particular."

"What is your occupation?" asked the judge.

"I'm a waiter, your honor."

"What was your last job?"

"I'm still waitin' fer a job."

"O," remarked the judge, "that kind of a waiter. Sixty days or $25 and costs."

Divorce Decree Given Mrs. Mary Higinbotham

Mrs. Nathalie Higinbotham, 1205 Ridge avenue, Evanston, daughter of Henry A. Blair, head of the Chicago Surface lines, was granted a divorce from her husband, Harry M. Higinbotham, yesterday by Judge Foell. She filed suit for divorce six weeks ago charging her husband with cruelty, but a few days later she filed an amendment charging him with infidelity! It was on the amended bill that she was granted the divorce.

John E. Wilkie, assistant to the president of the Chicago Surface lines, was a witness for the complainant.

KINDNESS AND GAS, BLENDED, SPEED CAR AWAY

Now William McGinley Seeks Auto and Youth He Took for Ride.

Will former State Representative William McGinley of 561 Stratford place ever again be so kind as to give "a rough looking young fellow" with a cap down over his eyes a ride downtown in his automobile?

Mr. McGinley will not. He did that yesterday and as a result he is offering this morning $100 reward for the return of his new 1918, $4,000, seven passenger auto, purchased three weeks ago, and stolen yesterday under the doorman's eyes from the front of the Congress hotel, while Mr. McGinley dined within.

Mr. McGinley started for the loop from his home shortly after noon. At the Rush street bridge he was held up while a river boat passed. "The rough young fellow" jumped on the running board of Mr. McGinley's car.

The Villain Enters.

"How's the chances for a lift downtown?" he asked.

"Fine," said Mr. McGinley. "Jump in."

The lad slid into the empty seat beside the former legislator. As they approached the heart of the loop Mr. McGinley asked:

"Where do you want me to drop you off?"

"O, I ain't particular," the youth replied, "anywhere'll do me."

Mr. McGinley stopped at the Congress hotel. "This is as far's I'm going," he said. "I have a date here for dinner."

"Thanks," said the youth, "she's a bird of a car, an' she runs like a top. Enjoyed the ride."

A Most Enticing Car.

"Don't mention it," said Mr. McGinley, and as he walked into the hotel he noticed the youth still admiring the car.

Thirty minutes later Mr. McGinley emerged from the hotel. Where his beautiful big blue machine with white wire wheels had stood there was a vacant space.

"I'll give $100 reward to any one who can turn up that car," said Mr. McGinley last night.

Fire Perils Hundreds of Telephone Girls in Loop

Fire which imperiled several hundred girls working as telephone operators at the Central exchange in the Title and Trust building was quickly extinguished last night by Policeman Edward Dogglett of the Central station and Night Switchboardmen Budd, Troy, Fortier, and Andrews of the telephone company.

The fire was started by quicklime carelessly thrown into a large box at the elevator shaft in the old Boyce building on Dearborn street. Fanned by a breeze blowing up the elevator shaft, the flames roared ceilingward in a moment. The policeman and telephone men fought the fire down with extinguishers.

Girls in the telephone exchange became alarmed when the flames just across the alley roared high into the air, licking the windows of the exchange.

WOUNDED VICTIM IDENTIFIES BOY AS $1,650 BANDIT

Robbers Shoot Cashier and Hold Pedestrians at Bay.

WAITE PHOTO.

An 18 year old boy was arrested and later identified as one of two participants in a daylight pay roll robbery yesterday. When their victim resisted he was shot through the left lung and as he lay helpless on the pavement $1,650 was taken from his pockets.

The wounded man is George Neybert, assistant secretary of the Gottfried Brewery company, who lives at 530 East Forty-sixth place. The prisoner, who was one of eight men taken in a roundup following the crime, gave his name as Joseph Perino, 157 East Twenty-first street. He was taken to the People's hospital, where he was identified by Neybert.

Seven other men are being held incommunicado pending a further investigation of their identity and recent movements.

On Way from Bank.

Neybert was returning from the Corn Exchange National bank with the pay roll and on his way to the brewery, which is at 337 Alexander street. In a passageway at 329 West Twenty-second street, he encountered two men.

There was no command to hold up his hands. One of the men drew a revolver, thrust it against Neybert's breast and fired. The bullet entered just above the heart. The victim fell where he stood. The second robber then stationed himself at the entrance of the alley and stood guard while his companion robbed Neybert's pockets.

$50 Overlooked.

The pay roll money of $1,650 was taken, but the robber failed to take $50 in a roll in another pocket. The two robbers then emerged from the alley and ran west in Twenty-second street.

When the robbers ran, pedestrians called the police. Neybert was taken to the People's hospital, where it was said he would probably die.

THREE HELD AS AUTO THEFT BAND

Automobile thefts totaling many thousands of dollars are believed to have been cleared up yesterday in the arrest of three suspects, one of whom, Dewey H. Stricklin of 3126 Rhodes avenue, is declared to have dealt wholesale in stolen cars and accessories.

Several stolen cars were traced to Stricklin's possession in garages at 3134 Rhodes avenue and 4822 Langley avenue. The other two, Adrian Carman of 3500 Lemoyne street and Richard McAvoy of 3317 West Madison street, were taken after a chase in an automobile. Both are under 20 years old and both were armed.

Carman and McAvoy admitted having been arrested before. A quantity of stolen property was found in their possession.

FREIGHT WRECK ON MONON.

Bedford, Ind., Aug. 3.—[Special.]—The wrecking of eight cars of freight train No. 74, north bound, at Logan, eight miles north of here, this evening at 6 o'clock tied up all traffic on the Monon railway until late at night.

ELKHORN
KRAFT CHEESE

For sandwiches there are two popular flavors, Pimento (a blend of cheese and Spanish pimentos) and Chile, with a little extra "bite" for the cheese-lover. Fine consistency for spreading.

For "Welsh Rarebit" there is the Rarebit Cheese, already prepared with eggs and seasoning. Simply great! When Elkhorn Rarebit is put on hot toast the effect is like delicious bacon. Don't forget that "meaty" value in Elkhorn Kraft Cheese.

Sterilized and absolutely pure when packed in sealed tins; no human hands touch it until you open it with the key that unwinds as easily as a reel of tape.

Do you realize its food value? Double the nourishment for the same price in meat. All the good of milk—man's first and finest food. Your grocer is supplied. 8 varieties in tins. 23 others in packages.

Johnny Appetite says—
"When they came after tea,
Unexpected, you see,
The lady at home only laughed—
'There's no need for worry;
No hurry or flurry,
If you're well stocked with good

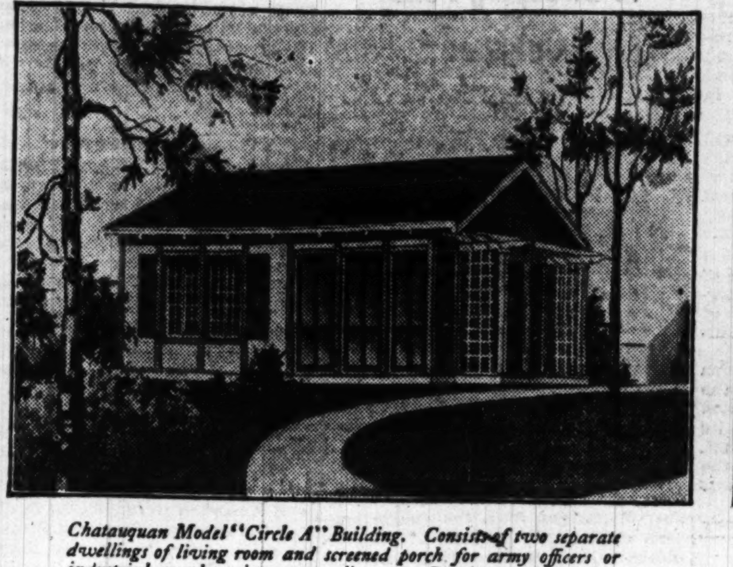
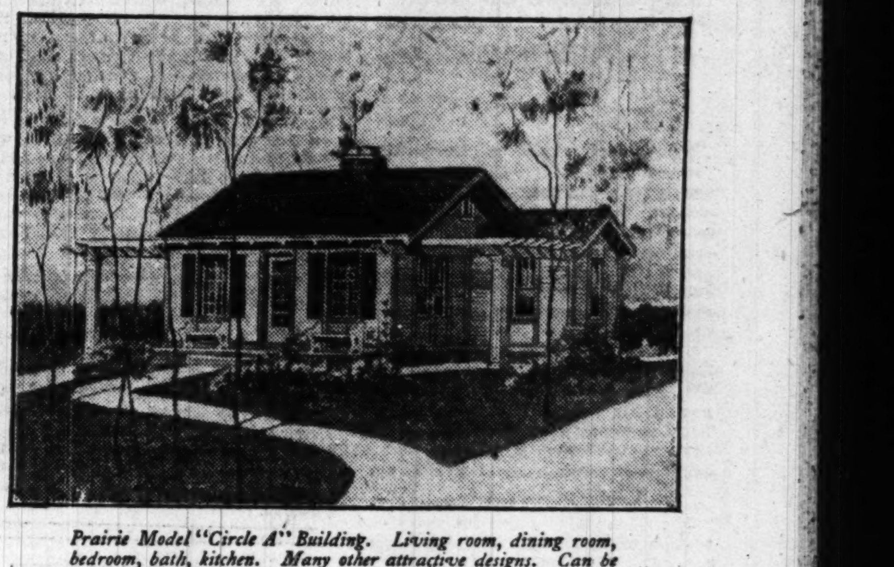
Building Erected In Four Hours!



Chatauquan Model "Circle A" Building. Consists of two separate dwellings of living room and screened porch for army officers or industrial workers in warm climates. Requires no foundation.



Prairie Model "Circle A" Building. Living room, dining room, bedroom, bath, kitchen. Many other attractive designs. Can be purchased in several installments, starting with only two rooms.

Whatever the Housing Problem—Farm, Industrial or Government—"Circle A" Interchangeable Unit Buildings Solve It Now, and Insure a Construction of Marked Stability and Durability. All Buildings Union Made.

The ready-to-build idea is not new, but "Circle A" unit buildings embody a host of features that readily commend themselves to the experienced builder and first builder alike.

Chief among these marked advances is the completed unit construction, and when we say completed, we mean to the last and finest detail. Each "Circle A" unit is absolutely complete in itself when it reaches you. The blank wall is made of heavy siding outside and full plaster walls inside, with dead air space and two thicknesses of fibre insulation, better than most permanent building construction.

Extras Included

All painting and staining is completed; each window, door or fly screen is fitted into the section; all hardware is in place before shipping; shingling or other roof covering is already attached.

"Circle A" completed units are all ready for instant assembling by bolting. Part fits part with an everlasting rigidity and stability. A hammer, wrench and screw-driver are the only tools you need. Never before have buildings so completely built by expert union workers in a great modern factory been offered to the public.

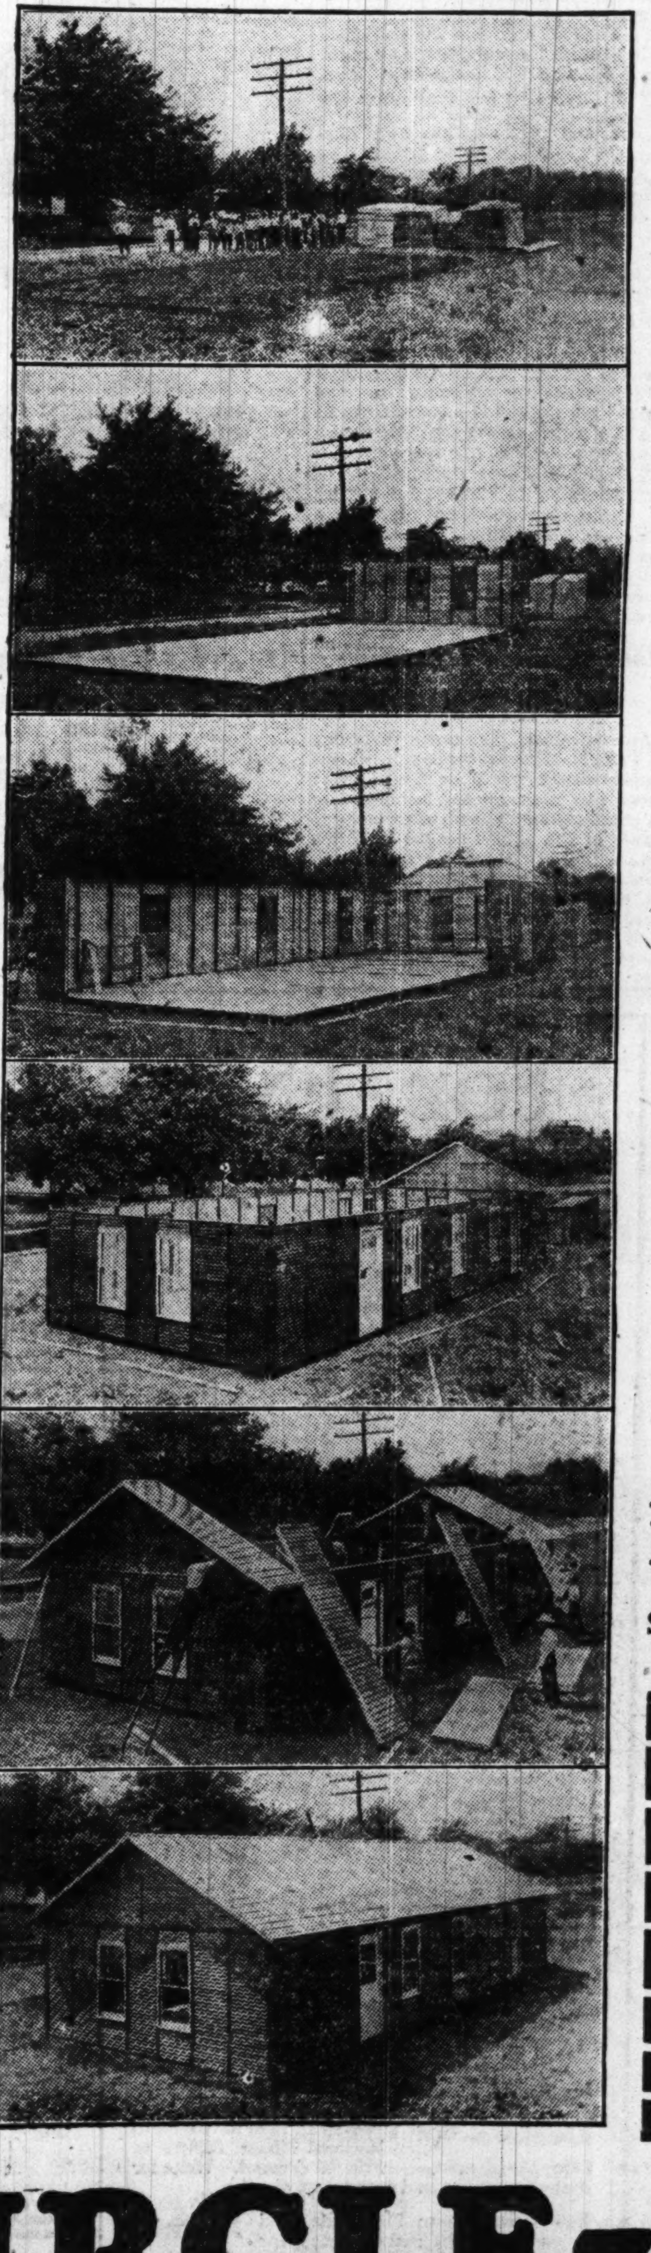
Quick Delivery for Every Building Need

"Circle A" Unit Buildings meet three vital housing needs at this time—Farm, Industrial and Government. They solve, and solve immediately, any housing problem in these important fields. And when the need for the present buildings has passed, the units can be dismantled and used again for any other building purpose—they are standard, interchangeable, permanent.

The progressive illustrations shown in this advertisement are of an Emergency Hospital, erected complete in four hours and fifteen minutes by sixteen unskilled laborers. The first picture shows "Circle A" units ready for assembling, picture six shows the completed structure four hours later.

"Circle A" unit construction knows no limitations in the field of single-story, frame buildings. Whether the need be for a humble chicken house, a garage, a bungalow, a more elaborate dwelling, club house, sanitarium, a group of buildings for farm, industrial or other housing—"Circle A" unit construction meets it readily, effectively economically.

Emergency Hospital—21x50 feet—no foundation required—erected complete in 4 hours and 15 minutes by 16 unskilled laborers.



"From Stump to Consumer"

"Circle A" purchasers benefit greatly by the tremendous resources of the Alexander Lumber Company with its 285,000 acres of timber lands, logging plants, saw mills, planing mills, lumber and material yards. There are no in-between profits. Costs have been pared to the quick—you reap the direct benefit.

And "Circle A" units are built in the factories of the Alexander Lumber Company by expert union workmen under the direct supervision of officials of this Company. The standard is high. Intensive construction and uninterrupted labor insure further savings.

KING WILL NO. 2 GENUINENESS UP TO JUDGE HORNER

Final Arguments Marked by Clashes Between Attorneys.

Final arguments were closed in the "second King will" case yesterday, wherein the Northern Trust company seeks to prevent probating the alleged second will of James C. King. The close came with a last tilt between attorneys and it was submitted for a decision by Judge Henry Horner. Judge Horner said he would withhold his ruling for the present.

In this last clash, Attorney Roy D. Keehn, representing Mrs. Mary V. Melvin, sister of the late Mrs. King, repeated his charge that the Northern Trust company attempted to railroad to the gallows Gaston B. Means, who was accused of the murder of Mrs. King.

Keehn Flays Reichman.

Mr. Keehn also called the court's attention to an alleged statement by Attorney A. F. Reichman, attorney for the trust company, that "no witnesses would dare to appear in court for Means, and that no reputable attorney would do so."

Mr. Reichman took exception to the statement.

"It was reported to me by three reputable persons," said Mr. Keehn. "And in fairness to myself I want to say that I would not have gone into the case had I not believed our instrument to be a genuine document."

Keehn said that his client had investigated the will carefully "while the representatives of the Northern Trust company, after seeing it for only a few moments, immediately went to the expense of hunting down Means, the chief witness, in an attempt to prove the will a forgery."

Insists Will a Forgery.

Mr. Reichman again insisted the disputed second will could not have been executed and referred to a conversation said to have taken place between Mrs. King and Frederick M. Rawson, president of the Union Trust company, a few days after the death of Mr. King.

"If that conversation took place," said Mr. Reichman, "it was impossible for the second will to have been executed. He said the name of the late Byron L. Smith, president of the Northern Trust company, had been used with the "expectation of forcing a settlement from the Northern Trust company."

WOMAN SEIZED AFTER ADMIRER TAKES POISON

Mrs. Daisy Jones of 1315 Washington boulevard, the wife of a civil engineer, was arrested yesterday after William T. Gillespie of 1359 West Adams street had swallowed poison in her presence. She has two children, but told the police she hoped Gillespie recovers "because I love him yet."

Mrs. Jones is 19 years old. She admitted ownership of the poison, but did not make an explanation of why she had it. She said Gillespie had been drinking and had told her he must have her or no one, following this declaration by gulping three tablets.

She said she dashed the bottle from his hand and left the room. Later Mrs. Anna Grasler, in whose home Gillespie roomed, found him unconscious and called the police. He was taken to the bridewell hospital.

Order Thurber to Pay His Wife $200 a Month

Seymour Thurber, formerly of the Thurber Art galleries at 75 East Washington street, who fought extradition through the Supreme court of California, after having fled the jurisdiction of Illinois, yesterday was ordered by Municipal Judge Sullivan to pay his wife, Mrs. Sallie Thurber, $500 before next Saturday and $200 a month thereafter.

Woman's Business Advice Bad, So He Asks Her Arrest

John Kantor of Sharon, Pa., had $310. He wrote to Miss Teresa Kurvens of 1585 Clybourn avenue, asking her advice in the matter of starting a restaurant. They went into business with the $310. The first day's receipts, according to John, were $1.25. Yesterday he caused Teresa's arrest, saying she bunked him.

Northwest Side to Get Increased Water Supply

Residents of the northwest side and of Jefferson Park, who suffered from a shortage of water during the hot spells, are assured an adequate supply tomorrow, for the water from the Mayfair pumping station and the Wilson avenue tunnel will be turned into the mains.

LASSIES

More Than 1,000 to Don Salvation Army Poke Bonnets to Raise "Coffee and" Fund.

It will be a case of lassies here, lassies there, Salvation Army lassies everywhere during the week of Aug. 11 for more than 1,000 women, many of them members of the Cook County Auxiliary State Council of Defense, who have agreed to wear the poke bonnet and khaki uniforms during the drive.

They will "man" the street corners, the booths, solicit contributions in the buildings, and take care of the great big coffee urns that are to receive the dimes and quarters that will mean hot doughnuts, luscious pie, and steaming beverages for the boys in France.

Every one of these volunteers will know and tell the story of the self-sacrificing work done in the cold dawn of the mornings under fire by the real Salvation Army lassies who are daily risking their lives behind the battle lines.

The arrangements for this feature of the campaign were completed yesterday by the women's committee, of which Mrs. George M. Shirk is chairman.

The women of the Chicago Commons and other settlements have joined the movement in a body. Every exemption district organization has signified its intention of doing more than its bit, and Chicago is expected to pass the mark set by New York, which was $350,000.

ALDERMEN VOTE 1 A.M. CLOSING FOR "DRY," CABARETS

All night activities of "dry" cabarets got a wallop yesterday by the city council committee on home defense. The committee recommended for passage an ordinance licensing these places and forcing them to close at 1 o'clock in the morning, the same as saloons and "wet" cabarets.

The proposed ordinance, which is to go to the council tomorrow, gives the police department supervision over "dry" cabarets, a power it does not now possess.

A graduated license fee is specified in the ordinance. This runs from $25 to $100 a year, depending on the seating capacity of the places.

If the council approves the ordinance it will hamper the activities of all night "dry" cabarets and dance halls. Most of these places do not open until the saloons and "wet" cabarets are about to close, and then continue until daylight.

"All night" movies will not be affected by the ordinance. They come under the theater license provision, and can remain open all night if they want to.

Acting Chief Alcock recently told the aldermen that the "dry" places are that in name only. He said most of them dispensed intoxicants, but that the police department was almost powerless to prevent this unless detectives were permanently stationed in the places. He suggested an ordinance to give the police department the power it seemed to lack in this respect.

The council license committee is to meet Thursday to consider modifying the "anti-cabaret" ordinance for places which sell intoxicants. It is believed that a move will be made to modify this so that entertainment, other than public dancing, can be given in the "wet" places.

Staats-Zeitung Employes to Issue Paper Today

Announcement was made yesterday by Paul F. Mueller, receiver, that the Staats-Zeitung would be issued today under new management, composed of an organization made up of former employés of the paper, headed by Erich Beilke, Fred Maisold, and Max Gentzke. The paper has been issued for the last four Sundays under the direction of the receiver. Judge John Stelk yesterday said that he had ended his connection with the paper with the last suspension of publication.

UNION LEAGUE SHAKEUP HITS CLUB MANAGER

Steward and Waiters Go in Sweeping Policy Change.

The Union League club has determined upon a sweeping change of policy and management.

It became known yesterday that the first step in this direction was taken with the acceptance of the resignation of Everett E. Noyes, manager of the club, and his assistant, Andrew T. Anderson, steward.

The successors of Noyes and Anderson have already been chosen. They are George H. Robinson, who has been manager of the Minnesota club of St. Paul, and Capt. A. F. Hassfeld, formerly of the Midday club of Chicago.

From Camp Grant.

Capt. Hassfeld comes direct from Camp Grant. He was recently honorably discharged from the quartermaster's department because of physical disability, and has already assumed his new duties. Mr. Robinson will relieve Manager Noyes on Aug. 15.

It is said the régime of Mr. Robinson and Capt. Hassfeld means the inauguration of a new policy which will bring the club administration to a more modern standard.

As one member put it: "We want new blood. We want modern methods."

Surprises Members.

While the change in management was contemplated for some time, it came as a surprise to various members and employés. Manager Noyes had been with the club for more than twenty-seven years and was looked upon by his many sponsors throughout the club as a fixture.

No sooner was the announcement of the changes made than rumors of a general walkout of the 250 employés and that members were waiting upon themselves became current. These proved incorrect, but forty girls have been installed as waitresses as a part of the new policy scheme.

President Frank H. Scott, members of the house committee, and Noyes and Anderson were reticent in discussing the changes. President Scott merely said: "Mr. Noyes was highly esteemed. He resigned to go into another business that he doesn't want known at this time."

SHRAPNEL

A service flag bearing 227 stars was raised yesterday by the congregation of Anshe Kenasses Israel synagogue, South Homan avenue and Douglas boulevard, at which more than 1,500 persons were present. Judge Harry M. Fisher spoke on the changes that the world war will bring.

Ald. T. J. Lynch of the Thirty-fifth ward, and Representative James C. McGloom were speakers last night in a service flag raising in the block between Forty-first and Forty-second avenues in Gladys avenue, in which the service of thirty-three men was lauded. There was a program of songs and instrumental music.

At the annual outing of Modern Woodmen of America and Royal Neighbors of America, held yesterday at Riverview park, a service flag was dedicated to the 936 members from Chicago and Cook county now in the service.

BODINE TO USE 'PERCENTAGE OF ERROR' ALIBI?

Chief of 1916 Census Is Ready with Reply on Padding Charge.

When W. L. Bodine, chief of the 1916 census, appears before Assistant State's Attorney Henry Berger, probably tomorrow, it is believed he will answer the charges of padding the census with a "percentage of error" alibi.

Figures shown in the census exposé indicated that every ward in the city had been given an increase in population varying from a few thousands to 10,000. The total of the figures was 195,000.

Mr. Bodine, Supt. John D. Shoop, and President Edwin S. Davis have refused to talk about the padding charges. It is understood, however, that Mr. Bodine claims that all censustakers add something to their official figures to take care of those missed in the enumeration, and that he was merely following the general plan.

Charges Inspire Recommendation.

One of the matters which Supt. Shoop asked the old board to investigate was the accuracy of the census as taken at present. It is believed the charges of padding inspired that part of the recommendation. Mr. Shoop will be asked by Mr. Berger about the alleged padding as well as the other features of the census exposé.

In working on the census, Mr. Berger uncovered another school board affair smacking of politics. It was the story of Michael A. Ziegler of 5137 South Lincoln street, who said Attorney Charles R. Francis warned him before he went to work that unless he gave up his civil service appointment for a job at the bridewell President Davis would prefer charges.

Ziegler said he insisted upon accepting the position, that he worked a few days, and that on last Friday he was notified by Charles J. Forsberg, the new business manager, that he was suspended and that a copy of the charges would be furnished him in due time.

Has Trouble with "Solid Six."

It was in connection with the position of supervisor of furniture repairing at the bridewell that Ziegler had trouble with the "solid six" leaders. At the suggestion of Mort MacCornac, he said, he took the civil service examination. First place was given to John Taylor, friend of Fred Lundin and a brother-in-law of Virtus Rohm. But when the vacancy occurred Taylor decided not to take the job and Ziegler was certified.

"I was told by MacNornac when I worked under him," said Ziegler, "that the school board was after me and would get me. 'They want you to contribute to your ward committeeman,' he told me. I told him 'nothing doing'; that I was giving business services and was not in politics. I took the civil service examination for supervisor of furniture repairs and a week ago Thursday I received notice of certification.

Warned by Francis.

"I was sent to Mr. Davis and he said he had to see Mr. Francis. I went back the next day, and Francis and Davis had a conference, and then Francis told me that if I insisted on having the position, Mr. Davis would file charges against me immediately.

"I told him that would be impossible, as I had not yet begun to work. Francis then sent me to Davis, and Davis told me to report Wednesday, but never mentioned filing charges. I was given a letter to Supt. Siman at the house of correction authorizing him to put me at the head of the repair department, supplanting Charles Aimen. Aimen and I have both worked there since Wednesday. I was supposed to be in charge, yet Aimen has never received any notice from the board to give way to me. Friday afternoon I was called to the office. When I went there. I was sent to Mr. Forsberg's office, where the latter handed me my suspension notice."

The letter of suspension was not even typewritten.

Near Beer to Be Classed as Taxable Beverage

The amber near beer liquids, which, as Tom Lewis used to say, "look like beer and taste like beer, but once you've got the stuff inside you, somehow lack authority," henceforth are to be included among the taxable drinkables, according to word received yesterday by Internal Revenue Collector Julius F. Smietanka from Washington.

IN POLITICS

Anti-Sullivan Democrats Show No Hurry in Making Up Slate.

THE Municipal court slate of the anti-Sullivan Democrats will not be made up until some time during the coming week. All tentative arrangements were discarded for the time being late yesterday afternoon, when the executive committee took a recess until tomorrow afternoon at the Hotel Morrison headquarters. "There is no hurry about the Municipal court candidates," former Mayor Harrison said. "My own judgment is that no slate will be prepared until first filing day at the earliest." Concurrence came from Ald. J. O. Kostner, chairman of the allied executive committee, and William L. O'Connell.

Monday, Aug. 12, will be the first day for filing petitions for chief justice, bailiff, clerk, and the associate judges of the Municipal court. City Clerk James T. Igoe, with whom the petitions will be filed, said yesterday that 5 o'clock in the afternoon, the regular hour for closing his office, will be the last minute for the reception of petitions.

All of the Deneen Republican candidates and the ward organization chairmen representing the Deneen forces have been summoned to meet at 5:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon at the Hotel Morrison headquarters of the Deneen organization Final plans are to be matured for the active prosecution of the county primary campaign.

Congressman George E. Foss will speak tomorrow noon at a luncheon given in his honor by Chicago business men at the Hotel La Salle. One of the purposes of the luncheon will be to perfect the organization of business men in behalf of Mr. Foss' candidacy for the Republican nomination for United States senator.

FORD HERE; SAYS HE'LL BE MARTYR TO SENATORSHIP

Doesn't Want Office, but, if People Insist, Well—

Henry Ford, passing through Chicago yesterday morning on his way to Detroit from Kansas, vigorously explained that he doesn't want to be senator from Michigan, that he hates politics, has no ax to grind, won't spend a cent to be elected, but "will leave it with the people."

"I am a strange kind of a man to be a candidate for United States senator," he said. "I am not looking for the place and I am no politician. But if the people want me I shall serve the people."

Mr. Ford was asked if he would fight for 100 per cent patriotism.

"Exactly," he replied. "The people can have me if they think I'm the man they want. If they don't, so much the better. I have always been treated right and I am going to treat the people right. There is no politics about me."

Mr. Ford was accompanied by his son, Edsel, who is not in army service, but has been exempted. Young Mr. Ford refused to say anything either about himself or the war.

DOBYNS RECALLS BRITTEN CENSURE AS AN ALDERMAN

The record of Congressman Fred A. Britten, while serving as a member of the city council, was characterized as "a decided disappointment" in a campaign speech last night by Fletcher Dobyns at the Diversey Boulevard Methodist Episcopal church. Advancing further reasons why Congressman Britten should not be renominated for his present office, Mr. Dobyns quoted voluminously from reports of the Municipal Voters' league, which set forth that certain owners who let contracts to Britten's firm were favored in getting special permits.

"Britten also startled the harbors, wharves and bridges committee by advocating fifty years as the limit of a franchise," Mr. Dobyns continued. "His attitude and acts in the council do not lead to confidence in him."

The league report for 1912 was quoted by Mr. Dobyns, as follows:

"Fred A. Britten finishing second term. Record still unsatisfactory. Led successful fight to weaken some of the strongest features of the new building code. In recent budget scramble on floor of council sought to increase salaries by over $100,000 a year against objections of finance committee. Weakened qualifications of building commissioner, deputy commissioner, and regulations governing ventilation of tenement houses."

G. O. P. PREPARES FOR BIG BUSINESS AT STATE FAIR

State Committee Meets Thursday to Call Convention.

The Republican state committee will meet next Thursday morning at 11 o'clock at the Great Northern hotel to issue the call for the Republican state convention that follows the September primaries, and particularly to make plans for the big Republican roundup that will be staged on governor's day at the Illinois state fair on the following Thursday, Aug. 15.

State Chairman Fred E. Sterling yesterday sent out the notices for the state committee session. According to custom the state arsenal at Springfield has been reserved for the use of the Republican state convention and there is no doubt but that the state committee will issue the proper summons for the state convention to be held in Springfield Sept. 20, notwithstanding the fact that the Democratic state committee last week picked Springfield as the city and the hall of representatives as the place for their state convention, to be held under the terms of the primary law on the same day.

Busy Time at State Fair.

The state fair next week will be the center of all state political activity and the state committee is to take the necessary steps to arrange for taking care of the Republicans of all factions and interests who will be in Springfield.

Because of the centennial celebration the state fair this year comes nearly two months earlier than usual. The senatorial campaign will be at its climax, according to all present indications. All of the senatorial candidates will maintain headquarters during the week in the downtown district of Springfield and at the state fair grounds and the understanding is that the three chief battlers, McCormick, Foss, and Thompson, will be on the job personally, supported by strong forces of retainers from Chicago and from over the state generally.

From indications now Springfield will be the storm center, politically, for two or three weeks. As the state fair is winding up the centennial celebration begins. On Aug. 26 Col. Theodore Roosevelt comes to the state capital as the orator of the day at the unveiling of the Lincoln and Douglas monuments. Preparations are being made for the entertainment of the greatest crowd ever in Springfield on that day.

Democratic Plans.

Democrats have made no formal preparations as yet for their day that probably will be set for Wednesday, Aug. 14, dependent upon what the state leaders will decide after consultation with Senator Lewis. Senator Lewis has not been able to get into Illinois since the senatorial campaign opened because of the pressure of congressional duties. That he may be able to get here next week as the chief figure at Democratic day at Springfield was the hope expressed at his campaign headquarters at Hotel La Salle.

With all the primary petitions filed, the Republican and Democratic candidates for state and congressional offices are at the wire. Wednesday is the last day for filing withdrawals of filed petitions, both at the office of the Secretary of state and the office of County Clerk Sweitzer. Jockeying for position probably will cause some withdrawals in the legislative districts for members of the Illinois house of representatives. There may be a few withdrawals for county commissioners in Cook county. Otherwise, the list of starters is about as it stood when midnight struck Friday night.

The State Chairmanship.

State Chairman Fred E. Sterling has but one opponent for the Republican nomination for state treasurer. He is Charles A. White, who was a candidate for state auditor four years ago. George E. Keys of Springfield, late Friday night, announced that he would not file, but that he was starting a campaign immediately for the treasurership nomination in 1920. Hugh S. Magill filed his petition against State Superintendent of Public Instruction Francis G. Blair.

The Springfield filings show that there will be hard Republican fighting in but two of the downstate congressional districts. Congressman King in the Galesburg district is opposed by former State Senator Hurburgh. Former Mayor Bennett of Rockford opposes Congressman Fuller. All other sitting Republicans have no opposition. Factional battles in Chicago have produced candidates against Congressmen Madden, Wilson, Juul, and Britten, with candidates backed by each of the three factions in the districts now represented by Democrats. All of the downstate Democratic members have no real trouble on hand. The four Chicago Democratic congressmen have been indorsed by both the Sullivan and the anti-Sullivan factions.

LAST MINUTE

LAST minute filings at Springfield with Secretary of State Emmerson, just before the time limit expired at Friday midnight for entrants for the September primaries, included the following:

Republican—Members of Congress: Eighth district, James Hodgson, Chicago; Tenth district, Charles M. Moderwell, Chicago.

Republican—State representative: First district, Benjamin H. Lucas, Chicago; Seventh district, Lee W. Carrier, Chicago Heights, and Howard P. Castle, Barrington; Ninth district, Rudolph Babbs, Chicago; Sixteenth district, Henry Ludwig Jr., Secor; Nineteenth district, James M. Kittleman, Berwyn; Twenty-fourth district, Charles A. Gregory, Lovington; Twenty-fifth district, Theodore W. Steinert, Chicago; Twenty-sixth district, William Noble, Gibson City; Twenty-seventh district, Burt Craig, Wethersfield; Thirty-eighth district, H. O. Panhurst, Staunton.

DEMOCRATS WILL OPEN CAMPAIGN TOMORROW NIGHT

With the passing of the last day on which nominating petitions may be filed, the campaign for the ticket of the regular Democrats will be on in full swing tomorrow.

Two meetings will be held tomorrow night, one at Placek's hall, 2347 South Kedzie avenue, in the Twelfth ward, the home of Anton J. Cermak, the regular candidate for the nomination as sheriff, and the other at 5401 Broadway, in the Twenty-fifth ward, the home of Harry R. Gibbons, the regular candidate for county treasurer.

Meetings will be held nightly from now until the end of the campaign. These meetings will lead up to a demonstration which will be held on Sunday, Aug. 25, at the Coliseum, at which all of the candidates will appear.

"The ticket of the regular Democratic organization was placed in the field by the managing committee elected at the direct primaries by a majority of the Democrats of Cook county," said Henry Stuckart, chairman of the executive committee of the party, in telling of the plans for the meeting.

MODERWELL IN TENTH DISTRICT CONGRESS RACE

Charles M. Moderwell filed his petition late Friday night at Springfield as a candidate for the Republican nomination for congress in the Tenth district. His campaign was opened yesterday under the direction of a committee of which Alfred L. Baker is chairman, Harry P. Pearsons secretary and William F. Carlson, treasurer, with headquarters in the McCormick building. Mr. Moderwell issued the following platform:

"In submitting my candidacy to you I do not appeal to any particular faction in our party. This is no time for factional politics among candidates for congress. I ask the support of all voters regardless of factional lines.

"The supreme demand today is to win the war. As a member of congress I shall devote my full energy with that demand in view. I shall give wholehearted support to every administration measure for the accomplishment of this great end. I am for the country first and the party next.

"I am fortunately free to give all my time and attention to congressional work. In my desire to represent the people of the Tenth district in congress I seek merely the opportunity to render the best public service of which I am capable, to the nation and to our district."

LOWDEN'S NAME TO HEAD LIST OF PATRIOT SAVERS

Governor Must Give Away Thrift Stamps Bought Pershing Week.

Gov. Lowden's name will be first on the list of 3,000,000 Pershing Patriots of Illinois which is to be sent across the seas after the Pershing Patriot week drive of Aug. 15 to 22.

In order to get his name on the list Gov. Lowden will be forced to purchase war savings stamps which he must give away, and give away to some one not directly connected with his family, because the law allows one person to own but $1,000 worth, maturity value, of war savings stamps.

When the war savings campaign was first launched Gov. Lowden became one of the early members of the Maximum club by going the limit. Mrs. Lowden and all the Lowden children also became Maximum club members, as did Mrs. George M. Pullman, Mrs. Lowden's mother. None of them can own any more war savings stamps.

Must Head the List.

But the governor's name must head the list of Pershing Patriots, so he will purchase more stamps and give them away. To whom he will give them he has not announced.

There are thirty-three spaces for names on each blank which is being sent out by the war savings committee. It is hoped to get each state senator and each member of the house of representatives to head one of these lists. Every city official and every candidate for office also is expected to head one of the lists and to see to it that the list is filled up.

It is expected there will be a good deal of competition as to whose list will represent the sale of the most war savings stamps. If any official or candidate is able to fill up his list with maximums, representing the purchase of stamps with a maturity value of $1,000 each, and costing $838 in August, it will represent the sale of $27,564 worth of war savings stamps.

Early Returns Urged.

Each official and candidate is asked to obtain his list early and send it back completely filled as early during Pershing patriot week as possible, so that they may be tabulated and given to the public.

Similar rivalry is being manifested by officials of leading packing plants, manufacturing establishments, stores, and offices. Each one will try to see that his own establishment fills up as many honor rolls as possible, and to make them 100 per cent in Pershing patriots. Employés will be allowed to put the names of members of their families on the office honor rolls provided one or more war savings stamps are purchased for each name that goes on the roll.

All over the city there will be street booths and bank and building booths. A woman's auxiliary has been formed in every postal district. Pershing badges and Pershing home window posters will be supplied to all signers of the roll.

PUBLIC GUARDIAN

Woman Lawyer Appointed by Governor to Cook County Position.

Mrs. Mary Belle Spencer

The appointment of Mrs. Mary Belle Spencer, the wife of Dr. Richard V. Spencer of Chicago Heights, as public guardian of Cook county was announced by Gov. Lowden yesterday. Mrs. Spencer succeeds Miss Nellie Carlin. She is a lawyer in active practice and for the last twelve years has been identified with social and civic welfare work.

"As public guardian I shall give Cook county, first of all, a business administration," said Mrs. Spencer last night. "The records of my office will be accurately kept and will be at all times open to inspection.

"A golden opportunity for war-time service is before me; I fully realize that. To the bereaved children of Cook county I shall give the conscientious work the fiduciary relation requires."

Mrs. Spencer is a graduate of Northwestern university, with the degree of bachelor of laws. She gained considerable notice some years ago in the work of Americanizing naturalized citizens.

ACCUSED BY GIRL'S MOTHER.

Peter Meyer, 19 years old, 1219 Leon place, Evanston, was arrested yesterday on complaint of Mrs. Mary Gauci, who alleges that Meyer attempted to mistreat her little daughter, Mary, 7 years old, in the vicinity of her home, 1241 Leon place. Meyer was released on bond of $1,000.

ONLY GARDENERS STICKING TO END TO GET MEDALS

'Quitters' Now Still Have Time to Start Over Again.

The garden committee of the State Council of Defense has concluded to consider as eligible for TRIBUNE garden medals only those who persevere to the end of the growing season, making the available soil produce all it is capable of.

Thus the spasmodic gardener who raised a single crop of quickly maturing greens and then quit is not in the same class with the one who carefully planned and executed a system of crop rotation to derive a continuous supply of vegetables. The lax gardener who started correctly, only to neglect his plot and abandon it to weeds when hot weather came, is not to be rewarded like the diligent, steadfast worker who keeps his plot clean and prevents the spread of disease and insects by untiring effort.

Awards in October.

The medals are to be awarded in October. Those who have already cleared their garden beds can still plant succession crops to stay in the running. Those who have let their gardens run to weeds and neglected their crops, can still root out the thieves or cut them down and remove them, that they may not be classed with the deserters of the soldiers of the commissary.

Boys and girls of all educational institutions should see to it that their school or home gardens are registered with the garden bureau of the State Council of Defense, 120 West Adams street, or with the garden editor of THE TRIBUNE. If there is no local supervisor, induce the principal, one of the teachers, or any competent gardener of the neighborhood to volunteer his services in duly crediting each war gardener and reporting to the State Council.

Parochial Schools Active.

Parochial schools, academies, and seminaries should not overlook the fact that separate bronze and silver medals have been set aside for their best gardeners. The director of each such institution should see to it that the pupils' gardens, both at home and in a possible school garden, are duly supervised and reported. Give the children an incentive to become proficient gardeners and to produce the greatest possible quantity of foodstuffs in this hour of need.

Several individual gardeners from the Cathedral and Resurrection schools and from the diocesan preparatory seminary have entered the contest. There are many school and community gardens and thousands of eligible individuals who should not let the medals go by default.

Five hundred bronze medals and twenty-six silver medals will be issued in all.

The WINTER GARDEN

Presents a Patriotic Revue of "Over Here" and "Over There," entitled

"SMILES"

JACK ROSE
SPECIALIST for THE BLUES

MIKE BERNARD
RECOGNIZED PEER OF PIANISTS

Produced by Al Laughlin

Here's the Chorus of the Cyclonic Song Success from which the Revue Gets Its Name.

There are smiles that make us happy,
There are smiles that make us blue;
There are smiles that steal away the teardrops
As the sunbeams steal away the dew.
There are smiles that have a tender meaning,
That the eyes of love alone may see;
And the smiles that fill my life with sunshine
Are the smiles that you give to me.

"SMILES" is a polite Revue—a Revue of daintiness and refinement, and of much class—clean, wholesome, and capital entertainment. The interpreting cast is the largest ever seen at the Winter Garden Restaurant, and includes such well known entertainers as:

JACK ROSE, specialist for the blues; MIKE BERNARD, recognized peer of pianists; ANTHONY JERROLD, baritone; OLIVE CALLOWAY, singing and dancing comedienne; Mlle. LESTRO, premier whistler; LORRAINE BENHAM, prima donna; GENE MACK, character singer; Mlle. MARANITA, petite dancer; JIMMIE RIZZO, eccentric violinist; LORIN HUME, ABE ZIPPERSTEIN, JACK IRMINTAGER, JULIUS BAFUNNO, the saxaphone four, in pleasing specialties; and the WINTER GARDEN "Smilers," ANITA WHITE, BONNIE TARR, LAPETRA WHITE, MAY LOVE, DOLLY WRIGHT, BABE McINTYRE; TATTY DENNISON MIRTH EVERETT.

JACK ROSE, of the fun-making firm of ROSE & BERNARD, has been drafted, and may be called to duty in France at any moment. This clever "headliner" team comes direct from the Majestic Theatre, where they were a screaming hit all last week. It is with much pleasure that the WINTER GARDEN management presents ROSE & BERNARD to its patrons.

Opening Monday Eve., Aug. 5th
(No Cover Charge)

As a large "first night" attendance is certain, WINTER GARDEN patrons are urged to telephone WABASH 4800 for choice table locations.

OWNERS OVERRULE JOHNSON CLOSING PLAN

Capt. Moffett Sees Bombardment of Eastern Crew.

Great Lakes, Ill., Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Letting loose a batch of torpedoes, fourteen pounders, and depth charges in one bunch, the Great Lakes team sank the Atlantic fleet team, 6 to 2, in the first of a three combat series today. Red Faber, former White Sox and world series hero, came through with high honors after his mates turned defeat into victory by a five tally rally in the sixth round.

Fifteen thousand jackies, headed by Capt. W. A. Moffett—a most interested spectator—yelled and cheered themselves hoarse. The captain officially dedicated the new stadium by pitching the first ball, while a battalion band of 300 pieces furnished the music for the occasion. The victory was a fitting climax to a great day of activity at the station.

Bedlam of Rooting.

Never had the air been rent with such bedlam, particularly during the five run stampede. The rooting at a world series game never was greater in volume and the enthusiasm of a Michigan-Chicago football game was excelled by several miles. So enraptured did Ensign Jack Kennedy, boxing instructor and cheer leader, become, that he ripped the shirt from his back.

The story of the contest was centered in that one big inning for the Lake boys. Capt. Chouinard fittingly led the attack on the easterners when he opened with a double to right field. A moment later Driscoll and Leonard shot their leader across the plate with singles. Dyer bunted, but Long's wild throw to first gave him a life and allowed Driscoll to cross with the tying score.

Fleet Uses New Hurler.

Miller replaced Durning, former Brooklyn pitcher, and Catcher Clemons was honored with an intentional pass. Faber fanned, but Fox singled, scoring Leonard and Dyer, while Clemons raced to third, from where he registered on a passed ball.

An additional run came in the following frame as the result of Chouinard's second hit, a single, and Dyer's double.

Red Faber did excellent work outside of two rounds. In the third round Witt singled and Nork, the only officer in the lineup of both teams, tripled, scoring Witt. The latter also made the second run for the Atlantic fleet in the fifth after his single and a double by Rabbit Maranville, former Boston Braves' shortstop. Score:

GRANT'S DRIVES DEFEAT LOGANS BY 4-3 COUNT

Two drives by Camp Grant's baseball fighters in the sixth and seventh inning brought a 4 to 3 triumph over the Logan Squares yesterday at Logan Square park. Each attack netted a pair of tallies. The Logans launched a counter attack in the eighth and succeeded in pushing three runners over the river, but were stopped just short of a tie.

Hal Carlson, recent Pittsburgh star, and Hubert matched wits in a twirling duel and were about even. Each allowed seven blows. Beall's single, a walk, and an error by Meinke gave Grant two runs in the sixth. Three hits behind another pass produced the winning pair in the seventh. Moore's two base smash with two Logans on the paths netted two runs, and when Dixon was knocked out in a play at the plate Moore himself also scored. That finished the counting for the day.

C. A. A. TO STAGE A. A. U. TITLE MEET AT GREAT LAKES

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

Through the coöperation of Capt. William A. Moffett, commandant at Great Lakes Naval Training station, who always has taken a keen interest in athletics, the greatest track and field meet ever held in this country will be staged on the station's athletic field Sept. 20, 21, and 23, when the National A. A. U. outdoor track and field events, relays, and all around championships will be held under the auspices of the Chicago Athletic association.

These championships were awarded to the Meadowbrook club of Philadelphia at the national convention last year. Since that time complications have arisen and the club returned the award. There was little bidding for the title games until John L. Barchard, chairman of the Cherry Circle athletic committee, went to New York.

Rubien Accepts C. A. A. Bid.

Barchard called upon Fred W. Rubien, secretary and treasurer of the national body, who told him the championships were still open. Barchard then made a bid, which was accepted. After the local club received the games, the next move was to find a place to stage them. Capt. Moffett was approached and readily granted the Chicago Athletic association the use of the new athletic field, the barracks for dressing rooms, and the help of the jackies.

Capt. Moffett, who has worked hard in behalf of the mammoth athletic field, deserves the honor of holding this meet. It will be the first set of championships ever decided on a government reservation and the first games ever held on a track permitting 440 yards straightaway.

Shea to Try for Record.

F. J. Shea, the sensational quarter miler of the University of Pittsburgh, who has run the quarter mile in world's record time of :47 2-5, will be groomed to beat the existing straightaway record of :47 made by Maxey Long in 1900.

At present there are over 45,000 jackies at the station, and with the building going on at the present rate it is expected there will be at least 10,000 more when the games are held. There is a seating capacity of 25,000 at the field, but Capt. Moffett said he would make arrangements for 50,000.

Sousa to Lead Band.

The games will open with the usual flag raising and music by the entire station band under personal leadership of Lieut. John Phillip Sousa. A regiment of jackies will be drilled for messenger service to take off and put hurdles on the track, lay down string lanes, and do other things necessary at athletic meets, by orders from a bugle.

Along with the championship events will be races for the jackies, while efforts will be made to stage a set of relay races between sailors and soldiers. The committee still has plenty of time to work out such details, which will be announced when completed.

According to present plans, the junior championships will be held on Friday, Sept. 20, the senior title games the following day. Then after a day of rest, the various relay championships will be held Monday morning, Sept. 23, and the all around the afternoon of the same day.

In the Wake of the News

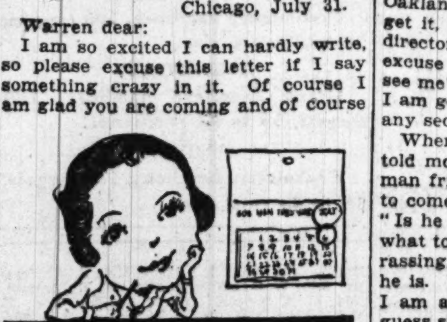
By RING W. LARDNER

THE EPISTLES OF EDNA.

Chicago, July 31.

Warren dear:

I am so excited I can hardly write, so please excuse this letter if I say something crazy in it. Of course I am glad you are coming and of course



I want you to call me up. If you didn't I would be just broken hearted because you——But I guess I would better stop before I say something that would shock you and then you wouldn't call me up or want to see me or anything and what would poor little "Eddie" do then? Or are you so easily shocked? I hope not because when I see you I know I will be so fussed that I may say or do something perfectly crazy and you will think I am a little "it" and wish you had never seen me.

It was dear of you to say you liked my poor little verses, but I almost wish now I had never written them. It seems perfectly terrible for me to of written those verses to one who I am going to see so soon and I never would of written them or at least sent them to you had I known you were coming to Chi. Please forget that you ever saw them or I will simply be embarrassed to death. One never stops to think when they do something foolish like writing those verses that one may be sorry afterwards.

I want to tell you what a narrow escape we, or rather I, had. One of the other girls had arranged to start her vacation on the third and mine was to start on the 10th, and yesterday she asked me would I change with her as she did not think she could have her clothes ready in time. So I said all right I didn't mind changing and then this morning she said to never mind because her clothes would be ready after all so she is going on the third and I am going on the 10th. But just think how I would of felt had I been going away on the very day you were coming to Chi though of course I would of waited had you of let me know you were coming. But even had I been out of the city I don't believe you would of cared. Would you, Mr. Soldier Man?

What time are you coming and when will you call me up? The number is Oakland 4371 and don't you dare forget it, but if you do it's in the phone directory so you see there will be no excuse for you. Will you be glad to see me? I am simply wild—But there, I am going to stop before I give away any secrets.

When I came home this evening I told mother I was expecting a gentleman friend of mine from Camp Grant to come to Chi Saturday and she said: "Is he just a friend?" I didn't know what to say and it was terribly embarrassing, but finally I said: "Of course he is. What else would he be?" But I am afraid I blushed terribly and I guess she noticed it because she smiled and changed the subject. You would love my mother and nobody could help from loving her. But perhaps you would prefer to not meet her and of course there is no need of you doing so though I like to have her know all my "friends." Would you like me to meet your mother? I know she must be dear to have such a d—r son and maybe some day—There, I nearly said something perfectly crazy, and I guess I would better change the subject.

Isn't it wonderful the way the Americans have been beating the Germans? It just thrills me to read about it and

I read the war news the first thing every A. M. after I get through with the society and club news and about the new motion picture plays. But it really does look like Germany was getting the worst of it now doesn't it and maybe you won't have to go over at all. Wouldn't that be simply wonderful, but I suppose you would be disappointed. But remember, d—r, there are others to think of beside yourself and who would be just pleased to death if you didn't have to go and I mean your mother for one and somebody else but I won't tell you who, so there! Would you like to know very much, old Mr. Curiosity? Maybe I will tell you Saturday.

O, will Saturday ever come and if it does I bet you will forget to phone me. But if you do I will die that's all and then you would be a murderer and you would be sorry you were so mean to

EDNA.

DRIVES MAXWELL FROM THE COAST

New York, Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Ray McNamara, driving a Maxwell truck loaded with army supplies from San Francisco, arrived here this morning, having made the transcontinental run by way of Salt Lake City, Omaha, and Chicago since July 17. This beats virtually all existing fast freight train schedules and establishes a new record for long distance performance by a loaded motor truck.

McNamara covered 200 miles a day and reports an average of twelve miles to the gallon of gasoline for the entire trip. His truck was equipped with pneumatic tires, which suffered only one puncture. The supplies he carried came from Australia and will be shipped to France.

EVANS BREAKS COURSE RECORD

Milwaukee, Wis., Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Chick Evans, Chicago's famous golf star, today broke the record for the Milwaukee Country club while playing in a Red Cross tournament with Jimmy Standish of Detroit against George Simpson of Oak Park and Frank Adams, pro at Beverly club.

Evans, although he had never been over the course, played in perfect form and in spite of two putts on almost every hole made the eighteen holes in 69. The record held by the club professional, Jimmy Simpson, was 73 and par is 72. George Simpson also was playing well, especially in the last nine, which he did in 34 against a par 36.

The two amateurs, Evans and Standish, won the match, 3 and 1.

SOX TAKE FIRST IN HITFEST, 10-3; LOSE OTHER, 4-1

BY JAMES CRUSINBERRY.

It didn't make much difference to the White Sox and the Philadelphia Athletics whether baseball continues until the end of next week or until Thanksgiving day, so they romped through a double header at Comiskey park yesterday and split the honors. The Sox took the first in quite rampant style, 10 to 3, while the Macks capered in with the second, 4 to 1.

It's hard to tell what the Sox and Macks are playing for, but in this instance they did furnish a few thrills to about 5,000 of the 15,000 or more Chicago fans who formerly visited the south side park on Saturday afternoons and cheered themselves hoarse. The Macks are trying to get out of last place and the Sox are trying to keep in the lead of the second division, so the incentive for baseball prowess is not of the keenest brand.

Opportune Hitting Wins for Sox.

Splendid and timely hitting and alert base running enabled the Sox to pile up the runs in the opening encounter. It was the kind of punch displayed last season, when they won the big championship, and the kind that would have won again this year had it been regular instead of occasional. They made only ten safe swats, but they bunched them and took advantage of all the mistakes made by the enemy, which carried them on in their drive like United States soldiers chasing Huns out of France.

Joe Benz was on the slab, handing out his neat assortment of curves and spitters, always steady and always effective. His mates backed him up in bang-up style, too. One John Watson attempted to hurl for the Macks and was so badly wounded that he was rushed behind the lines after four innings. The Sox were so far ahead that it was useless to waste a regular pitcher after that, so Jamieson, who is doing utility service for the outfield, went in and threw some left handed shoots across for the balance of the game.

Quinn Good Until Ninth.

The second game was a much better battle. Jack Quinn, who became one of us a few days ago, made his debut on the slab and pitched winning sort of ball but had things break against him in the end. He was opposed by Vean Gregg until the latter twisted something in his arm in the fifth and had to quit, whereupon Hubert Scott Perry was rushed into the fray.

For seven innings Quinn more than held his own with the visiting pair, but in the eighth, with the score tied at 1 to 1, the enemy shoved a run over with the help of a fumble by Risberg, and in the ninth they clinched it with three swats that sent two more home.

Kumagae Enters National, on Plea of Net Officials

New York, Aug. 3. — Ichiya Kumagae, the leading tennis player of Japan, at present in this country, has accepted the formal invitation of the National Tennis association to compete in the national championship tournament at Forest Hills, L. I., late this month.

Kumagae was loath to enter in view of the absence of a majority of the leading American players, who are in overseas service. At a special conference with officers of the tennis association, he was assured, however, that there would be worthy competition and consented to take part.

FLAP OF FLAG HEARD AS CUBS CHECK GIANTS

Lose First, 4-2, but Destroy Foes in the Second Game, 11-6.

BY I. E. SANBORN.

New York, Aug. 3.—[Special.]—Speed Martin, Boss Mitchell's raw rookie from the coast, was injected into today's double header with the Giants at the right time to avert what looked like disaster.

The Cubs lost the first game, 4 to 2, because Causey outpitched Phil Douglas. They gave Hendrix a lead of nine runs in two innings of the second game, but that would not have been enough for Claude the way the enemy was peppering him in the fourth and fifth rounds, so Martin was sent to his rescue and emerged victor by a score of 11 to 6.

Means Flag for Cubs, Almost.

The net result of Martin's performance is that the Cubs retained their lead of five and a half games instead of having it reduced to three and a half and can now leave the Polo grounds on Monday night with the National league pennant practically cinched.

Martin probably was nicknamed "Speed" because he is a curve ball pitcher, which makes him a welcome addition to the Cub staff, which consists of two left handers and several six inning spitball hurlers. His right handed benders fooled the Giants successfully, and he had good control of them, in spite of the fact he had hardly time to regain his land legs after his overland journey from California.

Causey Stops Our Boys.

The Cubs threatened to annihilate Causey in the first round of the opening game, when a home run by Hollocher inside the lot and a three bagger by Mann scored two runs. But the threat proved to be a promise on which the Cubs welched, for they never did another thing to Causey the rest of the way. The Giants counter attacked Douglas so persistently they tied the score in the third round, then took the lead in the fifth and nailed down the game in the sixth, after which Carter blanked them without any reward.

Pol Perritt started the second game against Hendrix, but was the victim of a terrific bombardment in the first two innings, during which his support blew up and helped out the Cubs. Nine hits, varying all the way from Pick's triple to safe bunts by Flack and Hendrix, mingled with two bases on balls, a Zimmerman fumble, and a double steal, made nine tallies and drove Perritt to the hospital. Demaree replaced him and shut out the Cubs until the sixth, when a single by Hollocher, a pass, and two sacrifice hits scored a run. Flack's home run into the right field stand in the eighth raised the Cub count to eleven.

Martin Speeds to Rescue.

Hendrix blanked the Giants with one hit for three innings, then they began to trim him. A single, a pass, and a triple were good for three runs in the fourth, helped out by an infield play. In the fifth three singles filled the bases with only one out, and Mitchell yanked Claude, sending Martin to bail him out. One run scored in that round on an infield out. Another counted in the home eighth because Mann and Hollocher lost Zim's pop fly in the sun, and still another went over in the ninth after a boot by Pick.

The debut of Pick at third was another feature of the second game. He replaced Deal at third and proved to be a spry and accurate fielder in spite of his one fumble. He tore off a single and triple against Perritt, but could not cope successfully with Demaree's slow boys.

Story of Cubs' Defeat.

The Cubs attacked Causey at the beginning of the first battle as if they meant to annihilate him speedily. Hollocher smashed a liner to the limits in right center and made four bases. Mann pulled a triple through left center and Paskert scored him with a fly to center. Causey halted the Cubs right there by striking out Merkle.

That lead of two runs disappeared in the second and third rounds. Doyle opened New York's second with a single. Zim walked. Compton sacrificed and Doyle scored from third on Kirke's out. Causey led in the third with a bunt past Douglas. Burns pulled a double over third. Causey was nailed at the plate on Young's bump to Douglas, but Burns scored from third while Zeider was throwing out Fletcher, tying the count.

Giants Get Lead in Fifth.

This knot held only until the fifth, when the Giants went ahead. Burns tripled with one gone and Young scored him with a double. Douglas stopped them there with the help of a swell play by Merkle and himself which robbed Doyle of a crashing hit.

The Giants attacked again in force in the sixth and scored one more tally by means of singles by Compton, Kirke, and McCarty. Douglas was withdrawn to let Barber hit for him in the seventh and Carter completed the slab work, only six Giants facing him in two rounds. The Cubs made only five hits off Causey.

The next local bicycle event of importance will be the amateur bicycle race meet under the auspices of the Belgian-American Cycling club, to be held Aug. 11 in Grant park.

VOTE TO PLAY UNTIL SEPT. 2 CREATES ROW

3 Magnates "Pan" Ban; Frame Late World Series.

WASHINGTON VIEW

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—There is no disposition here to interfere with the world's series. Provost Marshal General Crowder will leave it to the local boards. Inasmuch as the players have ten days' grace to find jobs after Sept. 1 it is felt here the few players affected on the two teams in the series could first get jobs and then devote their grace period to the series.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 3.—[Special.]—American league club owners in special session here today defied the wishes of President B. B. Johnson by voting to continue their playing season through Labor day and to play a world series after that date unless the war department interferes. There will be no schedule readjustment.

The action precipitated the caustic comment by Johnson that if the "club owners wished to act contrary to the wishes of the government, that was their business." In answer, President Comiskey of the White Sox, President Frazee of Boston, and Manager Griffith of Washington drew up a joint statement to the effect that Johnson "is through spending our money. From now on the clubowners are going to run the American league. His rule or ruin policy is shelved."

Looks Like Trouble in League.

Since the last feud of many years ago between Comiskey and Johnson, in which Johnson emerged victorious, the American league has been known as the "happy family," with Johnson as czar. Developments today promise domestic discord in the future, with the first skirmish decided in favor of the rebels.

The crisis was precipitated when Barney Dreyfuss, as an emissary of the National league, stated that while he was clothed with authority to arrange a world's series, he had ironclad instructions to make no agreement for a series before Sept. 2.

"My league," Dreyfuss said, "has given me no alternative. We intend to play through Labor day. If the American league quits sooner, that's its privilege, but I can tell you positively there will be no world's series."

Four Clubs Fight Ban.

President Johnson addressed his club owners, saying his interpretation of Secretary Baker's ruling on the "work or fight" order was that baseball should close on Sept. 1. He believed six of his clubowners were in favor of quitting Aug. 20.

When the final showdown came Johnson found that Chicago, Boston, Washington, and one other club, believed to be New York, favored adopting the plan of the National league. Clark Griffith led the fight against what the others believed was the wish of Secretary Baker. The others finally gave in and at 2:30 o'clock President Johnson announced the season would go through Labor day as originally framed.

Statement by Rebels.

Then the fireworks began. "If the club owners wish to take a chance on acting contrary to the ruling of the war department that is their business," Johnson stated when asked for an explanation of the decision in view of the advance prediction that the season would end Aug. 20.

Frazee, who has had frequent tilts with Johnson, then called together Comiskey and Griffith, and the trio drew up a statement, reproduced in part as follows:

"The declaration by President Johnson that we were taking a chance on continuing the season, inferring we were defying the war department, is an unwarranted misstatement of facts.

"Just why President Johnson should take the stand he did in this matter is beyond our comprehension. We believe he always has acted honestly and in a desire to act for the interests of the American league, but he has bungled the affairs of his league in this particular case. He issued a statement a year ago that there would be no world's series in 1917, but there was.

"Owners Will Run League."

"He has tried to close our gates several times this season, but from now on he is through spending our money. From now on, the club owners are going to run the American league.

"He has endeavored to shift the blame for his blunders upon the war department. Such a statement is misleading, and merely to cover up the mistakes made by him and his colleagues on the national commission.

"We criticize Mr. Johnson merely as an official. We have nothing against him personally, but from now on we intend to take a hand in the management of the league. His rule or ruin policy is shelved."

OLD ELM COURSE OPEN TO PUBLIC FOR RED CROSS

Evans and Ken Edwards to Play Hutchinson and MacDonald.

Red Cross Golf

Place—Old Elm club, near Fort Sheridan.

Routes—Northwestern trains leave 11:45 and 12:45; Milwaukee Electric to Fort Sheridan.

Admission—$5.

BY JOE DAVIS.

Charles Evans Jr., national amateur and open champion, and Kenneth Edwards, Midlothian champion, will meet Jock Hutchinson of Glen View, patriotic open champion, and Bob MacDonald of Indian Hill in a Red Cross match at the Old Elm club at 3 o'clock this afternoon. For the first time in the history of the club women will be admitted to the house and grounds.

The opposing teams met last at George Ade's course at Brook, Ind., on July 18, with honors even at the end of twenty-two holes. Today they will try to reach a decision, but the contest will be a much harder proposition than over the nine hole course at Brook, on which Chick shot a score of 30 the second time around.

Course a Golfer's Dream.

Old Elm, the joint creation of Architects Colt and Ross, may be described as a golfer's dream. The course measures 6,305 yards and has a par of 71 under the latest rules of the United States Golf association.

The ground is more rolling than that of any other club in the Chicago district, but the inclines are not steep and the going is not tiresome. With many small hills and valleys at their disposal, the architects had a wide range of choice, the result being a course which calls for accurate shot making from start to finish.

Accurate Tee Shot Needed.

The fairways are wide, but as many of them slant, an accurate tee shot is required, the rough being tall enough to present difficult lies. Every foot of the fairway is piped, and as care was taken to eliminate weeds when the course was made, the fairways are stretches of grass, a bad lie being a rarity. Through the greens the course is finely trapped, but a number of the putting greens are open, and while they look easy, they are sufficiently undulating to call for accurate work.

The property is finely wooded and, in season, there is a wonderful profusion of wild flowers. Many of these still are in bloom.

Course Open to Public.

Today's match will be the first to which the public has been invited, and a trip around the championship course is well worth while. There will be no auction of caddy privileges nor of balls, the admission fee covering everything.

Refreshments will be dispensed by Misses Caryl Dunham, Marion Clow, Margaret Pirie, Elizabeth Carpenter, Alice Bradley, Elizabeth Adsit, Barbara Granger, Martha Granger, Lolita Armour, Katherine Casselberry, Helen Hoyne, Katherine Blossom, Betty Hoyt, Margaret Strawn and Marion Osborne.

The board of governors consists of Edward F. Carry, Charles W. Folds, W. A. Alexander, David R. Forgan, R. Harvey McElwell, John G. Shedd, Charles T. Boynton, Benjamin H. Marshall, Donald R. McLellan, and Silas H. Strawn.

WINDSOR.

Windsor golfers took a rest from their many qualifying rounds and competed for War Savings Stamps, sixty-two players entering. F. S. Boyden, 85—15—70, won first prize. F. A. English, 92—18—74, who finished fifth, won second prize, and C. A. Luse, 90—14—76, won the prize for tenth place. Bill Lancton and Tommy Warren tied at 78 for low gross.

CALUMET.

Grandfathers had their day at Calumet, W. A. Cockrell winning the cup by 3 and 2 over W. H. Leonard. In the semi-finals for the Whiting cup C. H. Herrmann defeated V. W. Foster, 1 up, while J. R. Towle and H. Hurry finished all even and will decide the finalist next week. J. W. Revel won the blind bogey sweepstakes with 93—8—85.

It looked like a Hoo-Hoo finish in the best ball foursome, where C. H. Eib and T. F. Barrett, H. L. Clapp and J. S. Jenson, and A. F. Hopkins and J. B. Morris all finished 9 up on bogey.

RIDGEMOOR.

First match rounds in the various flights for the club championship at Ridgemoor resulted as follows:

Championship—T. F. Gallagher beat M. J. Fletcher, 3 and 1; A. N. Jones beat S. Ropp, 3 and 1; C. W. Hageman beat F. Mayo, 1 up; R. D. Stevenson beat Dr. O. T. Johnson, 4 and 3; H. E. Strassheim beat J. C. Weisert, 3 and 1.

Second flight—E. D. Gray beat J. J. Quinn, 1 up; E. R. Hoyt beat C. F. Webb, 4 and 2; J. M. Quinlan beat G. A. Myers, 4 and 3; W. D. Price beat J. W. Robb, 4 and 3; J. M. Coen beat A. C. Fordham, 3 and 2.

Third flight—G. A. Scott beat S. S. Wheeler, 2 and 1; F. A. Munson beat J. H. Bartelme, 1 up; H. E. Kropf beat H. W. Boos, 2 and 1; S. L. Dickinson beat C. H. Joy, 2 and 1; A. Cosner beat W. G. Wise, 1 up; W. J. Holm beat J. P. Wahlman, 1 up.

B. Herbert Milligan trophy, second match round—C. K. Anderson beat E. A. Herrick, 3 and 1; C. W. Hageman beat W. A. Bayliss, 3 and 1; A. C. Fordham beat J. A. Gilroy, 1 up; J. E. Stephen beat C. W. Bradley, 4 and 3; T. F. Gallagher Jr., beat H. Lehnthul, 5 and 3; R. E. Williams beat G. A. Scott, 3 and 1; A. Semrad won by default from F. C. La Rowe; E. D. Bray beat D. Wray, 1 up.

SOUTH SHORE.

South Shore members played the qualifying round for the Jenkins trophy, pairings resulting as follows: A. C. Jackman vs. A. R. Camp; C. E. Foust vs. W. S. Booth; R. Goldie vs. D. P. Robertson; C. P. Thompson vs. E. F. Olson; J. H. McCabe vs. F. H. Pitkin; G. S. Patterson vs. C. H. Scholle; W. B. Hart vs. L. C. Wagner; G. F. Rummer vs. W. Kemp.

At the conclusion of the third round for the Everett C. Brown trophy, the players stood as follows in the match play against bogey handicap: C. E. Foust, 16 up; W. B. Hart, 14 up; J. H. McCabe, 14 up; E. F. Olson, 14 up; J. P. Barrett, 13 up.

MAYWOOD.

Close matches marked two of the final contests for the Drechsler cup. C. E. McLean defeated A. A. Luttrell, 1 up, in the first flight, while E. W. Belling had a like victory over Phil Harrington in the third division. A. W. Drechsler won in the second flight by a margin of 3 and 2 over J. J. Johnson. A. Raedel, 86—15—71, and E. G. Kruger, 99—28—71, tied for low net honors in the eighteen hole medal handicap. L. L. Davis, 96—24—72; J. E. O'Shaughnessy, 94—22—72, and A. J. Lehnkuhl, 95—23—72, disputed third position.

OAK PARK.

The first round for the Governor's cup at Oak Park resulted as follows: H. A. Huskey defeated L. E. Yager, 3 and 2; T. E. Roberts defeated W. C. Seabury, 4 and 3; P. V. Castle defeated W. T. Brinkerhoff, 2 up; F. E. Long defeated W. P. Thiebault, 2 and 1; V. C. Green defeated O. Reid, 2 and 1; B. D. Stevenson won from W. H. Gardner by default; E. L. Hamilton defeated T. S. Squires, 2 up; W. J. Anderson won from B. M. Cheney by default.

OAK PARK COUNTRY CLUB IN O'NEIL IDEAL COURSE

Professional George Simpson Picks Fourth Hole for Two Par Shots.

BY GEORGE A. O'NEIL.
(Lake Shore Country Club.)

THE fourth hole at Oak Park Country club is the choice of George Simpson, the local professional, as a hole calling for two par shots to reach it.

GEORGE A. O'NEIL.

It is a type of hole that brings disaster to the over-ambitious golfer who is not satisfied with playing safe but tries for par shots and misses them. As can be plainly seen from the sketch, the tee shot calls mainly for distance to enable the player to reach the green on his second.

A wide spreading sand trap in front of a twelve foot mound placed 120 yards from the tee necessitates a well hit tee shot to carry the high bunker. On the other hand, too much weight in the tee shot might result in such a sacrifice of distance as to place in jeopardy the second shot—a shot demanding an extremely long flight to carry a creek which runs across the course directly in front of the green.

The green is tightened up by a fifteen foot mound covering about two-fifths of the green on the right hand side and by a pond on the left. The tension here makes the second shot beyond all doubt the feature shot.

Trees paralleling the left hand side of the fairway and part of the right not only take care of the hooks and slices, but also add to the beauty of the hole and the comfort of the players.

Many golfers can in memory travel back to 1911 and recall the great triple tie at Chicago Golf club, when George Simpson, J. J. McDermott, and Mike Brady battled an extra day for the national open championship. George failed to win, but had an opportunity to show his gameness and gave a sample of Scotch grit which makes it easy to understand why the Huns tremble when they meet the men in kilties—the Hoellen-Weiber, as they playfully call them.

During Saturday of the tournament, which normally would have been the final day, it rained incessantly and George was overcome by an attack of rheumatism to such an extent that he was unable to lift his right elbow to the level of his shoulder. Notwithstanding this handicap, he managed to secure a tie for first place.

Saturday night and Sunday the doctor worked on George's arm, but on Monday, when the tie was to be played off, no relief was in sight. The first bit of comfort was obtained on the eleventh tee by tying a handkerchief around his biceps. On this hole he secured a birdie four and on the twelfth a par four against six and five for his opponents, thus gaining three shots on the two holes.

Simpson's best shot during the whole tournament was on the thirteenth—when he played a ball from a bunker 200 yards to the green. But in doing this he jarred his arm so badly that the pain was too great for him. He was obliged to play the rest of the game with a seriously shortened swing and was unable to keep the pace of the eastern cracks.

'CLOWN' AND 'JOCKEY' GLEN OAK WINNERS IN COSTUME EVENT

With President Lee B. Vastine, attired as a jockey to furnish the speed, and George K. Throckmorton, dressed as a clown to provide the comedy element, this combination won the fancy costume event at the Glen Oak Country club yesterday. They reached the winning post with a card of 182—28—154, coming home under wraps. The prizes were thrift stamps with the exception of the award for the best costumed contestant, this being a silver cup, which went to C. F. Dupee.

It was a victory of borrowed plumes, as he encased his anatomy in a Highland costume, the property of Professional Dave McIntosh. Had Dupee been able to play the "doodlesacks" on the way around there is no doubt his team would have won.

R. C. Kearsley was dressed as a chorus girl, but found the yellow curls of "her" wig interfered with his swing, and so ditched the curls. A. L. Utermark had a Hawaiian rig, the dominating feature being black tights. His dome was crowned with an American flag.

Other Winners.

Other winners were A. L. Utermark and G. Bird, 205—45—160; F. Vastine and J. Shean, 191—30—161; and C. F. Dupee and Dave McIntosh, 193—30—163.

Pairings for the Director's cups are as follows: J. T. Leavitt and G. K. Throckmorton, E. P. Fleer and G. Bird, A. L. Utermark and Frank Lavin, J. Byrnes and V. Adland, J. Shean and G. Vastine, T. Barrett and H. Gilson, J. J. Green and L. Vastine, B. Budinger and R. P. Kearsley.

JACKSON PARK.

The city championship under the auspices of the Jackson Park Golf club will be staged Aug. 12 to 17. Entries can be made at the tee. Leading scores in the qualifying round of the monthly class handicap were: L. W. Ingalls, 85—23—62; W. K. Dale, 81—12—69; S. J. Lyons, 90—20—70; M. Hunter, 84—13—71; J. S. Hayes, 88—17—71; W. B. Scates, 81—9—72; J. T. Linske, 91—19—72; M. Cohn, 89—15—74; T. J. Monahan, 84—9—75; C. O. Babcock, 92—16—76; G. A. Miller, 99—23—76; J. T. Flanagan, 85—9—76; W. B. Johnston, 97—21—76; S. C. White, 95—19—76; F. C. Donacher, 91—14—77.

Gunnar Nelson and Brad Smith will play Jackey Gullickson, city champion, and Lester Mason, this afternoon.

HINSDALE.

In the qualifying round for the Old Boys' cup at Hinsdale the following were successful: J. K. Blatchford, J. N. Redfern, J. E. Smith, F. S. Peabody, J. C. Davis, E. H. Hicks, E. T. Martin, and J. J. Kralovec. Winners in the first round for the Visitor's cup were: E. T. Martin, E. A. Tracey, N. G. Simons, P. Schillito, J. J. Kralovec, S. S. Jackson, and R. Thies. In the Blount Age limit cup the winners were J. K. Blatchford, J. Kralovec, G. M. Fisher, W. V. Brown, E. T. Martin, and E. H. Hicks.

CRAFTSMEN LEAGUE.

The Circles improved their standing in the west division of the Craftsmen league by winning from the Garfields, 9 to 8, at Oak Park. A home run by Rapp in the seventh with the bases full won for the Circles. Score:

W. Cresap and B. F. Cummins; M. E. Schoenthaler and T. W. Ritchie; T. H. McInnerney and H. F. Parish.

SKOKIE.

A. B. Jones won the Half Century cup at Skokie, defeating R. S. Clark, 5 and 4.

The largest field of the season turned out in the qualifying round for the Town Medals competition, which is open to players from six different north shore towns. C. F. Pierce Jr. had the double distinction of low gross and net, shooting 84—15—69. Six flights of sixteen each qualified, the Glencoe contenders being C. F. Pierce, 84—15—69; G. Sibley, 85—14—71; W. A. Kittermaster, 97—26—71; O. F. Roberts, 87—15—72; J. E. Lloyd, 92—20—72; W. Sutherland, 86—13—73; A. A. Murray, 95—22—73; O. M. Knode, 100—27—73; W. J. Champion, 101—28—73; K. D. Steere, 85—11—74; A. B. Jones, 87—13—74; A. Washington, 88—14—74; M. B. Orde, 90—16—74; W. A. Levering, 97—23—74; A. J. Mitchell, 98—24—74, and W. B. Dale, 99—25—74.

LA GRANGE.

M. L. Joslyn defeated B. H. Wilson, 4 and 3, for the 1918 President's cup at La Grange. The 1913 Bogey trophy was captured by W. P. Elliott Jr., who finished the last lap of the thirty-six hole journey 12 up on the colonel. H. C. Simons was second, 7 up, while A. R. Johnston was third, 6 up.

SHOOTING STARS COMPETE TODAY FOR RED CROSS

Expect $5,000 from the Match at South Shore; Troch and Bills Win.

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

Although a lot of interest was shown yesterday in the Herqules open professional and amateur shoot, one of the preliminary races to the Grand American handicap, which opens at the South Shore Country club tomorrow and continues through Friday, the shooters' interest was centered in the Red Cross shoot to be held today between picked teams of amateurs and professionals from the east and west.

There always has been a lot of rivalry between eastern and western shooters, and this will be the first time west and east have met with representative teams. Any number of shooters who did not intend to arrive in Chicago until tomorrow have changed their plans and will be on hand to raise money for the Red Cross.

Troeh Captain for West.

The western amateur team will be captained by Frank Troeh of Vancouver, Wash., who is champion of his state. Troeh has selected a number of men and will not decide on the final selection of ten until just before the shoot, because some of the chosen shooters may not put in an appearance.

Troeh has honored the following men in the west by naming them for his team: William Herr, F. A. King, William Ridley, C. L. Richards, Mark Arie, C. A. Gunning, A. R. Chezik, Art Russer, G. L. Becker, Edward O'Brien, C. M. Powers, George Roll, J. B. Chatfield, Billy Hoon, E. A. Woodward, A. H. Winkler, C. W. McGary, Charley Peck, Ben Donnelly, William Whetleaf, B. F. Elbert, L. B. Maytag, and Dr. Stonie.

Candidates for East.

Charley Newcomb of Philadelphia, champion of the Quaker state, will select a team from the following to represent the east: Frank Wright, George Fish, Louis Curtis, J. Clark, Fred Plum, H. J. Pendergast, Fred Harlow, C. D. Coburn, Johnny Martin, Allen Heil, Wolfolk Henderson, Billy Ford, Fred Tomlin, R. M. McIntire, Dr. Vanderhoof, and David Wadsworth.

Not to be outdone by the amateurs, the professionals also will show their wares, and the best shots in the pro ranks will be pitted against one another. The veteran W. R. Crosby of O'Fallon, Ill., will lead the western team, which will be composed of Fred Gilbert, Charles Spencer, Arthur Killam, Fred Bills, William Stannard, Jay Graham, Ed Graham, Phil Miller, Homer Clark, Rush Razee, and H. W. Cadwallader.

Another veteran professional will captain the eastern team. R. O. Heikes was chosen captain and named the following men for his eastern team: John R. Taylor, Charles Young, C. J. Stevens, Lester German, Edward Banks, H. Kennicitt, J. H. Fox, W. S. Jones, and Walter Huff.

Red Cross Auction.

The great shoot will start at 3 o'clock. Each contestant will shoot at 100 targets from the sixteen yard rise, and the five highest scores on each squad will count as a team total. The privileges of refereeing the matches, marking, scoring, and pulling the traps will be auctioned off, while members of the Chicago chapter of the Red Cross will sell souvenir programs. Officials of the South Shore club and the Interstate Trapshooting association expect to realize at least $5,000.

In yesterday's shoot Mark Arie of Thomasboro, Ill., holder of the amateur Hercules trophy, was beaten by Fred Troeh of Vancouver, Wash., for honors in his competition. Fred Bills, the Chicago professional, was high gun in the professional ranks and took the cup away from Jay Graham of Ingleside, Ill.

Troeh Makes Fine Record.

Troeh annexed the amateur cup by giving a superb exhibition of shooting in the teeth of a gale which blew across the traps from the lakes. He broke 189 targets out of 200, which is considered remarkable shooting, considering that 150 targets must be shot at from distances ranging from eighteen to twenty-two yards and twenty-five pairs of doubles from the sixteen yard rise.

Following are the scores of yesterday's Hercules shoot:

SWEET WATER BASSES.

THE black bass, the rock bass, speckled bass, and several other so-called "basses" are not basses at all, strictly speaking, but belong to the sunfish family. The only true sweet water basses in American waters are the white bass and the yellow bass.

The white bass is the "kid brother" of the salt water striped bass or rockfish, which it greatly resembles in appearance but not in size. Rockfish weigh more than 100 pounds, but if you got a white bass much heavier than two pounds you would have to have the fish for evidence when you told your friends about it. Otherwise your tale would be greeted with the inane grins that blossom forth whenever one tells a pet "fish story."

No less an authority than Genio Scott pronounced the rockfish the gamest fish that swims, and considering his small size, the white bass is not a bush leaguer himself. He is what anyone would call "a clean looking fish" with his sides of silvery white relieved by several narrow lines, like the dashes made by a typewriter, of pronounced and contrasting black. His head is somewhat too small to make him a perfectly formed fish, but altogether he is a handsome, smart looking fish, and a goodly string of them is welcomed by all true anglers.

The white bass, or silver bass, as he is sometimes called, is found from Manitoba to Arkansas, being most plentiful in certain inland lakes in the middle west and in Lakes Michigan and Erie. They inhabit the deeper waters most of the year and spawn on the reefs in the spring. The youngsters grow very rapidly the first year and when midsummer rolls around immense schools of young and old fishes enter the rivers and bays, much to the joy of young and old boys and tomboys.

A few come into the lakes on the east shore of Lake Michigan in the spring, but the main "flight" arrives about July 20. Then out come the lil ol' poles and lines, minnow buckets are scrubbed and the lanterns filled and the wicks trimmed because, like most game fishes, the white bass does his feeding mainly at night. Of course, many are caught in the early morning and at evening, but over in Michigan you are not considered a true "white basser" until you have gone out at night and have taken the limit, at least once, with the aid of a lantern!

The feeding habits of this fish are above reproach, as he lives mostly on minnows and insects. Still fishermen prefer small shiners for bait, although one of the oldest and most successful white bass fishermen on Black lake, Michigan, gets his mostly on the tail fin of a yellow perch. This lure has the unquestionable merit of lasting.

Other cut bait will do, and we used to get 'em in Lake Erie, when a youngster, with a piece of red flannel for bait. Trollers use a small spinner, usually of brass, with or without a minnow, and catch many fish with this rig. A brass Colorado spinner, which whirls the hook and bait as well as the blade is a killer on these fishes.

A trait of the white bass that appeals to the scientific angler is that he rises beautifully to the fly, hitting it with great, good gusto, and, when fought on a light fly rod, he sure lets you know he is there. Using No. 10 coachman or professor flies, we have occasionally taken three fish "at a crack," and often two. It must be said, however, that the fish taken on the surface are likely to be the smaller ones, although this is less true when fishing after sundown.

When you see a "white bass" with the black lines along its side broken or dropped a half space and its back fins joined it is a yellow or striped bass. These fish were once common in certain lakes in northern Indiana. They are said to reach a weight of five pounds and are game fishes in every sense of the word and wonderfully "good eatin'."

The size of these fish varies in different waters, but a good average would be four or five fish to the pound; one weighing a half to a full pound is large, while a two-pounder could be called a lunker—there is at least one lake in southern Wisconsin where white bass average nearly a pound in weight. Whatever size you get them, they are excellent pan fishes, with a distinctive flavor.

U. S. OFFICERS OFFICIALS FOR SWIM IN RIVER

With a great race assured between Perry McGillivray, Buddy Wallen, and Herman Laubis of Great Lakes Naval Training station, and Max Mott of the naval officers' school at the Municipal pier, members of the athletic committee of the Illinois Athletic club have named officials for the tenth annual river swim to be held next Saturday.

As the star swimmers represent various branches of the service, commanders and cantonment officers have been chosen to act as officials. Charles A. Dean, president of the National A. A. U., will act as active referee, while the other officials are well known to local athletic fans. The list follows:

Honorary referees—Capt. W. A. Moffett, Mayor Thompson, George Hull Porter, Nelson Lampert, C. A. Thorne, and James Pugh.

Referee—Charles A. Dean.

UTAH MAN WINS SHOOT.

JACKIES GATHER CENTRAL A. A. U. TITLES IN SWIM

Wallen Wins Half Mile and Perry McGillivray 100 Yard Honors.

In the 100 and 880 yard swims for the Central A. A. U. championships at Lincoln park lagoon yesterday, Great Lakes made a clean sweep from the Chicago Athletic association by taking first, second, and third in each event.

The races were held under the auspices of the Lincoln Park Boat club in connection with the club's rowing and canoeing regatta, and were watched by a large number of club members in the grandstand. Both sides of the course also were lined with spectators.

Buddy Wallen of Great Lakes, former Hamilton club star, won the half mile in easy fashion, finishing twenty yards ahead of his teammate, Herman Laubis, in the mediocre time of 12:30.4. Wallen took the lead at the start and was never headed.

McGillivray Wins Century.

Perry McGillivray, also of Great Lakes, captured the 100 yard free style after something of a battle with Johnny Bennett, another sailor, and a former Hyde Park prep swimmer. Perry had a slight lead for the entire race and put the affair on ice in the last fifteen yards. Walter Earle and Herbert Topp of the Chicago Athletic association, the only men conceded a chance against the little jackie, did not compete.

Miss Dorothy O'Brien of Butler house had the crowd with her more than any other of the natators when she swam to an easy win in the women's 100 yard breast stroke. Miss O'Brien stroked ahead in the first fifteen yards and won by considerable margin from Miss Goldberg of Chicago Hebrew institute. There were four starters, but only three finished.

In the women's 100 yard free style race, Miss J. Thompson, a Northwestern co-ed, swimming unattached, sprang a surprise on the crowd when she defeated Miss B. D. Bigelow by a few feet. This was Miss Thompson's first race in championship competition.

Canoe Events Fill Program.

Canoe tilting, shell racing, and a war canoe race kept the onlookers contented between the races, and the finals of the canoe tilting developed into what resembled an eight round boxing match before a spill was scored.

The senior teams of the Lincoln Park Boat club won both the four and eight oar shell races, both races being of the one mile variety. One of the features was a diving exhibition by Billy Heyn, the national champion, but R. Angus, an 80 year old Chicagoan, created almost as much of a sensation by floating in the lagoon with his hands and feet tied.

An Opportunity to Secure a Re-Built
MARMON 34
at a Special Price if Taken Quickly

IN response to numerous requests for used Marmon Cars we have secured a very limited number and have had them re-built and refinished.

Because of the Marmon principle of stabilized design, these cars possess all Marmon engineering achievements notwithstanding that they are not of the 1918 series. Except for a very few minor refinements the Marmon 34 has remained unchanged since its first appearance in 1916.

These re-built Marmons are newly painted and in excellent mechanical condition. They are good for years of use. As for economical operation, the Marmon surpasses all other cars of like size and power, averaging from 40 to 50 per cent more mileage from tires and 50 to 75 per cent more distance from gasoline.

The Marmon 34 is long, low and powerful, and 1100 pounds lighter than any other car of the major class.

Due to the restricted production of new cars and the over-demand for the Marmon, every man who wants to make sure of obtaining a really fine car at an exceptional price should investigate this opportunity at once.

FOUR RUN RALLY WINS FOR INDIANS AS RED SOX FALL

3 Doubles and 2 Slips Win Second Contest from Leaders.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 3.—Cleveland took the second game of the series from Boston today, 5 to 1. Doubles by Chapman, Speaker, and Wood and two infield errors in the fifth inning scored four runs. Bagby held the visitors to three hits, and except for an error by Chapman would have scored a shutout. Score:

Notes

New York, Aug. 3.—One more game on Monday will wind up the Cub-Giant battles.

Flack made three hits in the second game, beginning with a safe bunt to Zim and winding up with a home run into the stand.

Martin uses overhand, underhand and side arm delivery. He mixed up his stuff as if he had known the Giants all his life.

Fully 25,000 folks paid to see today's double header, not including a regiment of Boy Scouts, who brought their band along.

Compton tried to catch Pick napping with a bunt in the second of the second game, but the youngster pounced on it and made an underhand whip to first which beat the runner a step.

Manager Mitchell had a chance to book an exhibition game at New Haven tomorrow, with a fair sized guarantee, but gambled that there would be a world's series, and took no chance of putting the Cubs out of it.

Walter Craighead, business manager of the club, arrived this morning to attend the phantom meeting of the National league, which was adjourned yesterday to Cleveland. President Weeghman foxily stopped off in the Ohio city to be present at the doings there.

Kirke pulled a boner in the salubrious second of the second game. Killefer was on second with none out, so Hendrix bunted to Zim. Heinie aimed to throw to Doyle, who covered first on the bunt, but Kirke, near the pitcher slab, intercepted the peg and everybody was safe.

New York would have scored another run in the fifth, but a line drive by Young hit Umpire Rigler in the back and merely filled the bases. The drive would have gone to center and scored Demaree, besides putting Burns on third. As it was only Demaree could score on Sicking's infield out.

Notes of the White Sox

Another double header will be played with the Macks today, the first game beginning at 2 o'clock.

Two double plays in the early part of the second game spoiled chances for the Sox to do some business.

McMullin batted 1,000 in the first game with his two singles, one double, and one walk in four trips to the plate.

Young Pinnelli, our recruit third baseman, was given a whirl at the big league stuff in the closing innings of the first game. Eddie Collins took a rest, McMullin going to second, and the kid to third. He poled a drive to left that was a beauty, but it was caught.

Wilbur Good took a long distance swat away from Perkins in the second game by a daring run over to right center. He was going top speed and J. Collins was coming toward him the same way, but Wilbur yelled for the ball and got it.

A corking three base drive to left center by Chick Gandil settled things in the third inning of the first game. Two were on at the time and one out. Chick came home a moment later on a sacrifice fly.

ALL-STARS BEAT ENSIGNS SCHOOL IN 6 TO 5 CLASH

Field Contests Precede Hot Baseball Battle at Cubs' Park.

The team from the officers' school of the naval reserve at the Municipal pier was defeated, 6 to 5, by a team drafted from local semi-pro circles at Cub park. Erratic hitting and pitching and sloppy base running made the game a weird one. The jackies could have won with a punch in the last three innings, when six men were left stranded on the bases.

The receipts were divided between the athletic equipment fund for sailors at the pier and the Columbian Circle Hospital association. There were 1,500 fans present.

In the field day before the game Jamieson won the seventy-five yard dash, Maddigan the base circling sprint, Du Bois the long throwing contest, and Egan the short throw accuracy test. The jackie team and band will be at the Garden City park this afternoon. Jeff Pfeffer will pitch.

Cadillac Special Touring Car

Foster Custom-Built Body
132-Inch Wheel-Base Chassis

With infinite care and devotion to detail we have created ten of these beautiful seven passenger bodies for the 132-inch Wheel-Base Chassis.

In dignity, richness of finish, elegance of detail, and impressive style these cars—all different—will be the most exclusive, individualized cars in Chicago.

Seven inches longer wheel-base than standard Cadillac open cars produces a roominess of body seldom seen and gives riding comfort even excelling what you expect from a Cadillac.

One of these special cars is now on exhibition in our corner window. Others are in process of finishing, though there is still time to secure any desired color and upholstery. Your early inspection is invited.

WALTER HAYES TO PLAY HARDY FOR NET TITLE

Oelsner and Burdick Are Beaten in Semi-Finals of Western Meet.

FINALS TODAY.

Men's singles—Hayes vs. Hardy, 2 p. m.
Men's doubles—Hayes and Burdick vs. Oelsner and Miller, 4 p. m.

BY GEORGE SHAFFER.

Although beaten in a hard fought match, Edward Oelsner of the Chicago Tennis club added to his renown as one of the best players developed in this city in years when he and the veteran Samuel Hardy struggled through the limit of five sets in their semifinal round match in the annual western championship tournament yesterday at the Chicago T. C. Hardy won, 6—8, 4—6, 6—4, 6—4, 6—4.

The other semifinal was played after the feature match and turned out a walkaway for Walter Hayes. This match was one of the Hayes-Burdick series, Walter winning from Ralph in what probably constitutes record time for matches in their series, 6—3, 6—2, 6—2. The comedy element intruded into the Hayes-Burdick match, making a striking contrast to the tense play of the Oelsner-Hardy clash.

Oelsner-Miller Team in Final.

The second of the finalist pairs in men's doubles was decided, the match lasting until dusk. Oelsner and W. S. Miller won in four sets from R. F. Woods and J. F. Day, 8—6, 4—6, 6—0, 6—4, and this afternoon will tackle Hayes and Burdick for the western team championship. If Hayes and Burdick win, as expected, it will be their third triumph in the annual western sectional doubles.

In women's singles, Miss Carrie Neely again entered the final round, beating Miss Marion Leighton, 7—5, 6—2. Miss Neely will play Mrs. W. I. Northup of Portland, Ore., wife of Dental Surgeon Northup, U. S. N., stationed at Great Lakes Naval station, for the western sectional championship at 2 o'clock tomorrow. Miss Neely being unwilling to play on Sunday. The women's doubles match also will be played tomorrow afternoon, Miss Neely and Mrs. Northup opposing Mrs. Dorothy Field and Miss Marion Leighton. These two teams qualified in semifinals yesterday.

Hardy-Oelsner Battle.

Playing confidently and coolly, Oelsner took the first two games of the match from Hardy on a succession of flashy shots, and held this lead right through the opening set. Oelsner whipped his returns across the net with fine judgment and stayed in back court, where Hardy had little chance to force him out of position. Oelsner also displayed a snappy service which well matched Hardy's deceptive serve, and besides always winning his own service, he gathered his speed in several aggressive rallies which kept Hardy on the defense. Oelsner ran through the first two sets, 8—6, 6—4, always seeming to have the play in his command.

Oelsner started fast in the third set also, but Hardy began forcing the play to his back hand, and pressed Oelsner way out of position into a far corner of the court many times. Oelsner extricated himself from tight places in many sharp passages by slicing and whipping his drives back on difficult gets, but he could not keep this up all the time, and Hardy soon had him falling into spells of shooting outside or into the net. Oelsner steadied in a few games, but Hardy already had enough lead to guarantee the third set, which he won, 6—4.

Slow Up in Final.

Oelsner lost his accuracy of the first sets again in the fourth frame, after he had taken the opening game, and Hardy's stinging shots, always a little out of Oelsner's reach, began piling up points again. Hardy raced to the net with his service, and gathered numerous points that way, stopping Oelsner's volleys dead. Hardy was ahead, 3—1, then 4—2, when Oelsner staged a spurt, but could not catch up, Hardy winning, 6—4.

The final set was slower than the others, the strenuous pace telling on each man. At one time, with Oelsner in front, 3 to 2, and 4—0, he seemed to have a fine chance to sweep through the set, but he could not summon enough reserve, and Hardy gradually wore off his apparent exhaustion, and ended up with a burst of showy shots, both overhead and driving, which gave him the set, 6—4, and match.

Doubles Victory Easy.

Oelsner and Miller held the edge against Day and Woods in doubles except for the latter half of the second set, when Woods played all around the others with some fine smashes from overhead and forecourt. Miller did the heavy work for his side during the match, and after the start of the third set he and Oelsner never were in trouble. Summaries:

STAGG GOSSIPS WITH RIVAL OF 30 YEARS AGO

Tells Why Present Seattle Attorney Was Hardest Harvard Batter to Fool.

Frank Wiestling A. A. Stagg

BY GEORGE SHAFFER.

Memorable Yale-Harvard ball games of thirty years ago were fought over while Athletic Director A. A. (Old Man) Stagg of the University of Chicago, Yale '88, and Frank Wiestling, Harvard '88, now a highly prosperous attorney of Seattle, were renewing old acquaintance in Chicago recently. Stagg was Yale's star pitcher of those days. Wiestling, he says, was the hardest batsman to fool that he faced in the Yale-Harvard series of three decades back.

The Seattle man was in Chicago on business when he dropped out to the Maroons' athletic field in hopes of seeing his old time rival. The meeting led to many reminiscences.

Wiestling Developed Short Swing.

Coach Stagg retold some of the feats of Wiestling. The Harvard man was a pioneer in adopting the style of batting which now is regulation big league style.

"Wiestling was the hardest Harvard man for me to strike out," the Maroon coach said. "I used to strike out a great many, making eighteen, twenty, and, one time, twenty-two strikeouts. Wiestling had a good eye, batted right handed, and took a sharp, quick stroke at the ball. He spread his feet so he could take a short swing and could follow the ball to the last instant, getting a sharp, snappy stroke. Other players of that day were accustomed to stand with their feet close and took a long swing, giving them a slower start and making them easier for the pitcher to fool.

Pros Batted Same Way.

"Years ago the professionals stood with their feet together, the same way, and I used to be able to strike out the best of the professional hitters. The professional idea of hitting has changed since then. Wiestling and one or two other college ball players had of themselves arrived at the system of batting which has since been adopted by the professional ball players because it has proved the best.

"Wiestling's success as a batter had an influence on my ideas in regard to the proper method of batting, and in that way directed my teaching of teams since then."

CHAMPIONS OF RING TO BATTLE SATURDAY FOR SALVATION ARMY

When the boxing carnival to aid the Salvation army in overseas war work is staged at Comiskey park next Saturday it might well be called a "champions' day." This has been assured by the acceptances of numerous stars of the professional ranks of pugilism, which will include Heavyweight Champion Jess Willard, Jack Dempsey, coming heavyweight champion; Featherweight Champion Johnny Kilbane, Lightweight Titleholder Benny Leonard, Mike Gibbons, recognized as the class of the middleweight division; Ted Lewis, topliner of the welterweights, and others.

These famed members of the swatting brigade will not go on exhibition. They will fight just as they do when there is coin and glory for themselves at stake. According to present plans four round bouts will be put on.

First Chance for Willard.

Champion Willard repeatedly has declared his willingness to assist in war work and this carnival is his first opportunity to make good. Jess is in Denver and was reached yesterday by wire. He has been asked to box Andre Anderson six rounds to a decision. Anderson is ready and eager to go on.

It was first planned to pit Anderson against Dempsey, but Tom MacMahon will meet the "submarine destroyer."

The six matches between the teams from Camp Grant and Fort Sheridan will be fought to the limit. The gold coast boys are all amateurs and have demanded that Camp Grant withdraw its professionals and fight on that basis. This Capt. E. J. Eddy has consented to do and his topnotchers, Eddie McGoorty and Johnny Ritchie, will spar with the champions of their respective classes in the professional end of the program.

Fifteen Bouts on Card.

The full card will consist of fifteen bouts. Six will be between the soldiers and nine between the champs. This is a change in the original schedule and was made necessary by Uncle Sam, who tabooed the arrangement which provided for a team match between Camp Grant and Camp Dodge.

The professional talent has been quick to volunteer.

James J. Corbett in all probability will referee.

The prices will range from $1 to $10. The boxes will be auctioned off in the restaurants, cafés, board of trade, stock exchange, and at the theaters. Reserved seats will be sold at the Hub and Bloom & Mayer's.

ANOTHER WIN FOR JACKSON NET MEN

The Jackson Park Tennis club, playing in the south section of the Public Parks Tennis league, made a triumphant close to a conquering season yesterday, when a team composed both of regulars and substitutes maintained the supremacy of Jackson's courts against the Speedway club visitors, and won, four individual matches to one. Jackson did not lose a team match all season, and dropped only two individual contests of fifty played. Yesterday's victory gives the trophy in the south section, and entitles Jackson to meet the north section, winner for the year's title. Jackson was south section representative last year also, but lost in the final team match of the year, to Speedway, which in 1917 played in the north section, and won the north sectional honors. Summaries:

Singles—Ralph Rice, Speedway, beat R. Krug, Jackson, 6—3, 2—6, 6—0; W. H. Irwin, Jackson, beat L. Kisch, Speedway, 6—3, 6—1; J. Parks, Jackson, beat "Doc" Pierce, Speedway, 6—3, 6—4.

Doubles—C. Fowler and L. Leavitt, Jackson, beat "Doc" Pierce and Ralph Rice, Speedway, 6—4, 6—0; J. Parks and E. Talcott, Jackson, won by default.

GARFIELD [4] AT MOZART [1].

Playing in the north section, Garfield Park's team, strengthened by the two fast Filipino players, Perfecto and Dallana, won from Mozart, 4 to 1, on the latter's grounds. A. and B. Dougall, Garfield's "kid" team, dropped the only match, but made a plucky fight in that. Summaries:

Singles—C. Dolan, Garfield, beat R. Pieper, Mozart, 2—6, 6—4, 6—3; M. Wade, Garfield, beat W. Johnson, Mozart, 6—3, 3—6, 6—3; C. Perfecto, Garfield, beat L. Schur, Mozart, 6—3, 2—6, 6—4.

Doubles—C. Lallana and L. Daniels, Garfield, beat R. Pieper and W. Johnson, Mozart, 2—6, 9—7, 6—2; T. Hess and L. Schur, Mozart, beat A. Dougall and B. Dougall, Garfield, 6—0, 8—10, 7—5.

SPEEDWAY OPEN MEET.

Lee Campbell accomplished the unexpected in an advanced round of the all-comers' tournament conducted by the Speedway Tennis club, Fifty-seventh street and South Park avenue, by defeating Arthur P. Hubbell, 7—5, 6—3. Milton Agay, after dropping the first set, came back strong enough to eliminate J. P. Benson. Summaries:

Singles, fourth round—Lee R. Campbell, South Park T. C., defeated Art P. Hubbell, South Side T. C., 7—5, 6—3; Milton Agay, Speedway T. C., defeated J. P. Benson, South Park T. C., 2—6, 6—2, 6—1.

Doubles, third round—O. and B. Guyton, Jackson Park T. C., defeated Paul McCaskey, Hamilton Park, and Benny Adler, South Park T. C., 6—4, 6—3.

BANKERS LEAGUE.

The Merchants' Loan and Trust company team defeated the Hastings A. C. in the Bankers' league at Grant park, 12 to 4. The feature was the hitting in the ninth inning by Harder, Diederich, and Franzen. Score:

WICKED TUMBLE MARS RACE CARD AT AUSTIN TRACK

Excitement prevailed at the west side matinee yesterday when Halplex E., driven by the veteran Dave Leary, fell just before turning for home in the first heat of the 2:10 pace. It was a nasty looking accident but fortunately the driver escaped with no serious injuries. The winner turned up in Jay Brook, who showed marked improvement.

Lillian T., 2:02¾, paced the last half of a mile in the 2:10¼ event in 1:01½, a 2:03 clip. Many outside watches made the half in 1:01. Madam Mac took the free for all pace after Hazel Armstrong had won the first heat. The time was very fast in this event. Garner landed the fast trot, and W. F. G. the 2:30 trot after a hard four heat battle. Summaries:

2:30 trot—W. F. G., bl. g., by San Francisco [Harris], won; Hollyrood, second; The Raven, third. Time—2:31¼, 2:30½, 2:33, 2:36¼.

Free for all trot—Garner, b. m., by Echo Bell [Whitney], won; Fred B., second; Eva Bahur, third. Time—2:19¾, 2:20, 2:16½.

2:25 trot—Experiment, b. g., by Ivan the Great [Packer], won; Mayo, second. Time—2:27½, 2:23¾.

To beat 2:10 pacing—Lillian T., bl. m., by Roy Patchen [Whitney], $2:10¼.

Free for all pace—Madam Mac, br. m., by Expressive Mac [Bangert], won; Hazel Armstrong, second. Time—2:09¼, 2:11, 2:12¼.

2:10 pace—Jay Brook, br. g., by Silent Brook [Whitney], won; Halplex E., second. Time—2:15¼, 2:12¼.

2:20 pace—Lassie Dillon, b. m., by Sidney Dillon [Maierhofer], won; King Dodge, second; Elastic Pointer Jr., third; George Gagan, fourth. Time—2:16, 2:16¼.

DEMPSEY'S TASK NOW IS TO GET JESS INTO RING

Jack Shows That He Has the Stuff Out of Which Champs Are Made.

BY RAY PEARSON.

William Harrison Dempsey, better known as Jack Dempsey, may not hold the title of heavyweight champion of the world, but just the same he's a champion. When he splashed one of his sledgehammer left hand wallops on the jaw of Fred Fulton, sending the Rochester giant crumbling to the canvas in one round at Harrison, N. J., just one week ago, he convinced every fair minded critic in the United States that there is no fighter in the world as well qualified to wear the toga of a champion.

No fighter in many years has made the meteoric jump of Dempsey. Starting as a professional mitt swinger less than three years ago, he is in the enviable spotlight for which countless young men have striven. There is only one thorn in the side of Dempsey and that is Champion Jess Willard. There were two, previous to his meeting with Fulton, but one has been removed with the utmost speed.

Comes at Wrong Time.

It is indeed unfortunate that Dempsey's time for ascendency should come when the world is embroiled in a war which has had a damaging effect on professional pugilism. His chances of reaping the rich reward that champions under peaceful conditions are enabled to garner will be seriously hampered. They say: "To the winner goes the spoils," but in the case of Dempsey the coast heavyweight probably will not be able to do as well financially as Jess Willard and others before him. Dempsey deserves all that any champion should get.

Not only is Dempsey confronted by the possibility of not making big money after getting to the top, but he also is likely to find himself shunted off the championship track by Willard. There is a saying in gambling that the fellow who has the last guess "has the power." It looks as if Willard is the man with the power, at least for the present. The war has helped him to gain that power, which makes it tough luck for Dempsey.

Little Chance to Meet Jess.

The matching of Willard and Fulton by Col. J. C. Miller a few months ago, which finally was called off because of wartime sentiment against commercialism in boxing, makes it almost impossible for any one to make a match between Willard and Dempsey now. Willard can throw the monkey wrench into the machinery any time this match is mentioned by demanding a huge sum of money. If he does that, sentiment will not allow the contest any more than it allowed the Willard-Fulton match.

But Willard has the title and Dempsey's problem is how to get it away from him. There are just two ways that he may acquire it. One is to fight Willard and defeat him. The other is for Willard to retire as champion and permit the next man in line to pick it up. There is no question about who "that next man in line" is. His name is Jack Dempsey.

Willard Might Fight, If—

Looking at the first proposition from a perfectly sane viewpoint thoroughly convinces one the chances of lining up Willard for a fight with Dempsey are mighty slim. There is one chance and that most improbable. If the champion could be induced to forget the matter of money, sentiment against having him perform would die quickly, and there would be a championship battle worth watching.

If Willard would fight Dempsey at Camp Grant or some other army cantonment and permit the big part of the money to go to the army fund, there would be no difficulty in arranging the match, providing, of course, that Willard really cares to fight again. In that way he would be doing his "bit" in a most substantial way.

The writer happens to know how Dempsey would look at this proposition. If broached he would quickly say: "Go ahead and get that match for me and I will fight for nothing. I'll pay my own training expenses too." Dempsey told me that several months ago, and it still goes.

West secured eight tricks.

South made a beautiful play at trick 1 by refusing to win the trick and establishing a tenace over the diamonds remaining in dummy.

This play saved the game for north and south, and would have defeated the contract but for the equally good play of the declarer.

West realized that the king of diamonds was defended against a direct attack by south, but that it could easily be strafed by a rear attack from north.

Therefore west made his remarkable club plays at tricks 3 and 5, and refused the tempting heart finesse at trick 4.

The lead of the knave of clubs at trick 3 would have been warranted only by a knowledge of the cards held by south.

Sacrificing a trick or a high card to create a tenace is one of the most useful forms of strategy, and a good illustration of this point is given in the next deal.

West secured eleven tricks.

Had the declarer played his small club at trick 1 he could not have made more than eight tricks in the deal.

By getting rid of a high club he was able to place the lead with dummy at trick 4 and secure two more tricks in the club suit.

An incidental result of the good play by west was two extra tricks in the diamond suit, due to the discard by south at trick 6, and this calls for special consideration.

South played absolutely in accordance with the rules laid down by the best authorities, but still should have played better.

It was impossible for him to discard a spade as he could not guess the spade situation, all his discards being forced before the illuminating play of north at trick six.

South kept one heart, because from Elwell down all bridge writers have declared that at no-trump a player must not betray his partner's hand by the discard of the last card of an unplayed suit.

Despite all rules south should have thrown away the ten of hearts. He had already played so many hearts that west could have no illusions regarding that suit.

More important still, the declarer had indicated his intention of playing for diamonds by his heart discard at trick five, and south had a second trick in the diamond suit if he kept his four intact.

An inquiry concerning a lead out of turn is too long to reprint, but the law is given below:

"If an adversary of the declarer lead out of turn, the declarer may treat the card so led as an exposed card or may call a suit as soon as it is the turn of either adversary to lead.

"If a player called on to lead a suit have none of it the penalty is paid.

"If the declarer lead out of turn, either from his own hand or dummy, he incurs no penalty, but he may not rectify the error unless directed to do so by an adversary.

"If the second hand play, the lead is accepted."

ELECTION PUTS CHICAGO IN LINE FOR CUE TOURNEY

President Dryden Will Bring Amateur Meet to This City.

Chicago billiard players are gratified by the action of the National Association of Amateur Billiard Players in electing George B. Dryden as its head. Dryden is chairman of the billiard committee of the Chicago Athletic association and active in promoting amateur billiards.

As the C. A. A. has put in a bid for the Class A amateur balkline championship, it practically assured the next title event will be held there. It is many years since the last amateur balkline championship was staged in Chicago.

Western League Elects Officers.

The Western Amateur Billiard association completed its organization at a meeting held last week at the Illinois Athletic club. Officers were elected as follows:

President, William T. Brace, Illinois A. C.; vice president, J. G. Davis, Chicago; secretary, Charles Carnie, Chicago; treasurer, G. Raymond Collins, Hamilon club; board of control, Charles Heddon, Dowagiac, Mich.; Harry Brown and Fred C. Millar, Milwaukee; Melville A. Smithers, St. Louis; W. B. [illegible], Louis A. Brunswick, Woodward Holmes, Robert Michle, and Louis A. Brunswick, Chicago.

Each of the seven states in the Western association will be represented by an honorary vice president, to be elected later.

Percy Collins and Dr. William Campbell were reinstated as amateurs and Robert Lord filed an application for reinstatement.

Dates for Tournaments.

Tentative dates for the western events have been submitted as follows:

Sept. 30—Start of novice preliminaries.
Oct. 28-Nov. 9—Novice finals.
Nov. 18—Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Missouri class C balkline championships start.
Dec. 9—Western interstate class C balkline tournament at Chicago.
Dec. 29—Chicago class B balkline championship.
Jan. 6—Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Missouri class B championships start.
Jan. 27—Western interstate class B championship.
Feb. 3—Western class A balkline championship.
Feb. 24—National class A championship at Chicago A. A.
Feb. 10-March 19—Western pocket billiard championship at Illinois A. C.

LONGS LET GO; CORN AND OATS DROP SHARPLY

Cash Grains Lead in the Break; Corn Off 5@ 10 Cents.

BY CHARLES D. MICHAELS.

Bullish factors were few and bearish conditions predominated in the grain markets yesterday. Liquidation was on in corn and oats, with cash markets leading the breaks. Closing trades, while not the lowest, showed losses of 1½c to 2⅛c on corn and 1⅝c to 2⅛c on oats in Chicago. Corn in the southwest lost ¾c to 1⅜c, St. Louis leading, and oats ½c to 1⅜c lower. Corn in Kansas City is higher than in Chicago. Oats in Minneapolis lost 1½c and Winnipeg c for the day.

Provisions were weak, with a loss of 25c on pork, 5c on lard, and 12½c on short ribs.

Closing prices on corn, compared with a week ago, show gains of ⅛c to ⅞c, while oats were off 2⅝c to 3⅛c, August leading. Pork lost 50c, lard gained 22½c, and short ribs lost 2½c for the week.

Corn Market Overbought.

Scattered liquidation was on in corn in sympathy with the decline in oats, and an overbought condition was disclosed, a break of 1½c to 2⅛c from the previous day's finish following, with the close on a reaction due to short covering. August finished at $1.55¼, September at $1.57¼, and October at $1.56⅝.

Commission houses were active on the selling side all day, especially those that had been the best buyers of the previous day. Favorable war news from France and a decline of 5c to 10c in cash values served to intensify bearish sentiment. Buying against bids was a factor in checking the break and caused the rally at the last.

The trade paid little attention to dry weather talk from the southwest, although temperatures in Kansas and Nebraska Friday ranged from 100 to 107 and hot weather generally prevailed west of the Missouri river.

Movement is holding up much better than expected, receipts being 120 cars. For the week arrivals were 1,293,000 bu and shipments 770,000 bu. Last year receipts were 638,000 bu and shipments 417,000 bu. Primary receipts and shipments for the week were larger than last year.

Cash Oats Lead Decline.

Cash oats declined 1@3c in the sample market, and with the easier tone in corn had a depressing effect on futures, which lost 2@2⅜c. Stop loss orders were uncovered on the way down and the finish was about the inside figure, with last sales of August at 66⅞c, September at 67c, and October at 67⅛c.

There was general unloading by longs, and also sellers of offers were forced to protect themselves on the way down. Cash houses were good sellers of August. Buying support was poor the greater part of the day, but at the last holders of daily and weekly bids were inclined to take profits, steadying the market.

Reports of a very large export business Friday, with rumors of sales of 1,500,000 bu, had no effect. Receipts were 258 cars. For the week receipts were 2,842,000 bu and shipments 1,693,000 bu. Last year receipts were 1,114,000 bu and shipments 963,000 bu. Primary receipts and shipments were larger than last year.

Spring Wheat Moving.

An increased movement of spring wheat to terminal markets is expected this week, as weather conditions have been favorable for thrashing and high prices have been paid for the few cars received so far. Mills are anxious to get spring wheat, as this kind is used almost exclusively by the family trade. Primary receipts the last week of 17,160,000 bu were the third largest on record and the heaviest known at this season.

Rye and Barley Dull.

Rye was in liberal supply and good demand, with prices unchanged; No. 2 selling at $1.63. Receipts 43 cars. Milwaukee was unchanged. Northwestern receipts 7 cars. Barley dull and unchanged, with spot at $1@1.08. Receipts 9 cars. Milwaukee 3c lower, and Minneapolis 2c higher. The northwest had 12 cars.

Flaxseed at Duluth closed 1c lower; October, $4.55. Winnipeg 4c lower; October, $4.35. The three leading markets had 10 cars.

Timothy seed easier. October, $9.50 bid and $9.60 asked. Toledo, 2½@10c lower; September, $4.75; October, $4.55; December, $4.62½; March, $4.67½; April, $4.70 per bu of 45 lbs. Clover seed, no market. Toledo, 50@55c higher; October, $17.35; December, $17.30 per bu of 60 lbs.

Provisions Close Lower.

Weakness in corn and hogs and the disappointment in the showing of western stocks of meats for the month, the supply being larger than expected, led to moderate selling of lard and ribs by traders and distributors, and with lighter buying support, prices declined and closed at the inside, with moderate losses.

Cash trade was fair. Pickled meats are ½@1c higher for the week and dry salted at ¼@½c lower. Shipments of meats for the week were larger than the previous week and last year, while lard showed a big decrease for the week, but exceeded last year. Packing here since March 1 aggregates 3,035,000 hogs, against 2,561,000 last year. Prices follow:

Maximum Prices on Sheep and Goat Skins Unchanged

Washington, D. C., Aug. 3.—Maximum prices on goatskins, foreign sheep skins, cabrettas, deer, and elk skins, fixed by the price fixing committee of the war industries board May 1, are to remain in force until further notice, the board announced today. Maximum prices on Nigerian hides for August, September, and October shipment, the board announced, will apply to stocks on hand and shipments prior to Aug. 1.

WORLD'S GRAIN MARKET NEWS

THE sentiment of the grain trade at the close yesterday was bearish, the decline in prices for cash grain being the main feature in influencing selling futures. There was active buying of bids after the close, despite the fact that prices have had a good decline. It was freely admitted by traders that an overbought pit condition had more to do with the decline yesterday than any other factor. Good news from France was also used as a bearish influence. Traders are especially bearish on oats, expecting an increased movement of the new crop as weather conditions are favorable.

High temperatures, 100 to 108, in Kansas, and about the same in Nebraska yesterday, with an absence of rain, were not good for the corn crop. Traders, however, were disposed to ignore this factor and they expect that a low barometer will bring reduced temperatures and possibly showers. The weekly forecast was for temperatures above the normal.

Australia has 200,000,000 bu. of wheat, and is unable to ship freely owing to the scarcity of ocean tonnage, says a grain man who has made a special investigation into crops and conditions in that country. It has shipped 5,000,000 bu to the United States, and is grinding the wheat and shipping flour as fast as possible, a scarcity of ocean room restricting business in the way of moving it to the United States. Improved conditions for handling the grain have been adopted there. Damage from rats and mice has been overcome, but weevil is giving some trouble, and the losses cannot be fully determined until there is a clean up. Concrete elevators with 200,000 to 500,000 bushels capacity are being erected in New South Wales by American contractors, and a 5,000,000 bu house is under construction at Sydney. Other provinces have not fully determined upon the erection of interior elevators, but have taken no final action. Present crop prospects are good.

"All reports are that the coming hog crop is in good condition, and holders generally are confident of feed to mature it," says W. L. Gregson, provision specialist. "Notwithstanding the high pressure in live hog prices, neither buyers of spot or future products were stampeded, and reports of stocks show an abundance of meat products at all leading centers. It is about time for business to appear in January product, and it looks as though some of the prevailing values will be discounted when it does. October lard is at a discount under September, and October ribs should be at a premium over September. It is reported that the holding of September ribs is scattered and the cash trade is very dull."

New and old oats are selling at about the same prices. Some of the new oats are light weight and are ¼ to ½c discount.

A good export business was on in oats for shipment to Georgian Bay ports late Friday, and the business suppressed. There was said to be 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 bu, but exporters claimed that this represented the entire week's sales. The actual business here late Friday was close to 500,000 bu. Bids late yesterday were 73½c c. i. f. Georgian Bay ports for No. 3 white. Outside markets are said to have done most of the busness the last week at lower prices than Chicago.

Wheat receipts at Chicago last week were 5,035,000 bu, the largest at this time in over four years. They increased 1,965,000 bu for the week, and 4,983,000 bu over last year. Corn receipts of 1,293,000 bu, a decrease of 1,213,000 bu for the week, and an increase of 655,000 bu over last year, but with that exception were the smallest in four years. Oat receipts of 2,842,000 bu fell off only 36,000 bu last week, and were 1,738,000 bu more than last year.

"Barring an actual calamity to the corn crop, it would seem as though the present difference of nearly 90c between the price of September oats and September corn is greater than warranted by the real value of the true commodity," says Hulburd, Warren & Chandler. "Some day oats and corn should sell closer to each other, but whether corn is to break or oats are to advance is for the future to determine."

Winnipeg will have a civic holiday tomorrow. There will be no markets there.

Howard Field, Royal W. Bell, and John Slade have posted their Board of Trade memberships for transfer.

Primary receipts since July 1 aggregate 45,988,000 bu, compared with 12,478,000 bu last year. Kansas City has received 15,788,000 bu, against 4,432,000 bu last year. Chicago has 9,092,000 bu, against 1,090,000 bu last year. St. Louis 9,736,000 bu, against 2,452,000 bu; Omaha 3,491,000 bu, against 200,000 bu last year.

Vessel men say they will furnish boats for all the grain offered, and are ready to take it out as fast as they can get it. Lake shipments from Chicago for the week were 969,000 bu wheat, 152,000 bu corn and 1,106,000 bu oats. Most of the oats went to Canadian ports and will drop out of the visible supply.

Corn receipts at primary markets since Nov. 1, 1917, aggregate 236,657,000 bu, compared with 98,743,000 bu last year. Chicago has received 74,399,000 bu, against 69,272,000 bu last year. Omaha is second with 38,753,000 bu, against 22,561,000 bu last year.

Condition of spring wheat of 72.8 in Goodman's crop report issued for Clement, Curtis & Co., should have read 78.8. The Canadian crop is estimated at 200,000,000 bu. Oats on farms in United States Aug. 1, were 70,000,000 bu, against 47,000,000 bu last year.

Bert Davis with Lamson Bros. & Co., and a member of the board of trade, left yesterday for the Great Lakes, where he will join the wireless telegraphy battalion.

CASH GRAIN NEWS

DEMAND for cash wheat was slower, many buyers being filled up, and it took exceptionally choice cars to secure better than the government minimum price. Bulk of the offerings went at the basic in all markets. The three southwestern markets had 1,183 cars, and the six markets 2,091 cars, the latter comparing with 1,628 cars last week, there being a holiday last year. Local arrivals were 540 cars.

Cash corn declined 5@10c at Chicago with shipping sales of 65,000 bu. Demand was slow from the start. St. Louis was unchanged, Kansas City 2c higher, Peoria unchanged to 2c higher, and Milwaukee 5c lower. The leading markets had 273 cars, against 387 cars last year.

Cash oats worked down closer to the August and showed a loss of 1@3c, with shipping sales of only 10,000 bu. St. Louis was off ½@3c, Peoria ½c, and Milwaukee 2c, while Kansas City was unchanged. Leading markets had 434 cars, against 341 cars a week ago. Cash grain prices in leading markets follow:

ARMOUR WEEKLY REVIEW.

Armour & Co., in their weekly review of trade, say:

"Provision stocks at big packing points show a decrease of 4,750,000 pounds from a year ago. The stock of lard now is 17,896,000 pounds short of the supply in July, 1917. Receipts of hogs have been light during the week, prices strong and no heavy buying of provisions.

"Prime cattle reached a new high mark during the week. The dressed beef demand is fair, hot weather having a marked effect. Activity in canned goods increasing."

RAIL TONNAGE STEADY.

Officials of railroads operating eastward from Chicago and St. Louis report a steady volume of tonnage, which engages practically the entire capacity of the roads.

PRIME STEERS GAIN 25 CENTS DURING WEEK

Other Grades Mostly 25 Cents Lower; All Kinds of Hogs Weak.

Hogs sold within a very wide range. Common packing stock was 40c under the high time, although the top at $19.75 was only 5c lower.

Average price of hogs for the week stood within 10c of the record of last October at $18.80, being practically $10.00 higher than the nine year average for the corresponding week since 1908.

Steers sold unevenly all week and the average of $16.30 proved 5c higher than ever before, standing 15c higher than the previous week and $4.20 higher than a year ago. Top at $18.75 stood 30c higher than the previous week.

Receipts for Monday are estimated at 20,000 cattle, 34,000 hogs, and 17,000 sheep, against 11,919 cattle, 33,692 hogs, and 14,613 sheep corresponding Monday a year ago.

Average price of hogs at Chicago was $19.00, against $19.25 Friday, $18.30 a week ago, $15.85 a year ago, $9.55 two years ago, and $6.59 three years ago.

Estimated average weight of hogs last week, 242 lbs, against 245 lbs previous week, 235 lbs a year ago, and 231 lbs two years ago.

CATTLE TRADE UNEVEN.

Although prime steers gained 25c the past week and reached $18.75, other grades were mostly 25c lower and some showed more decline. Butcher stock finished steady to 25c higher. Canners 10@15c higher, with bulls steady to 35c up. Calves 25c lower, with best at $17. Stockers and feeders strong to 25c up.

FINANCIAL NOTES

THE war trade board has announced immediate release of all surplus shipping that has recently been plying between North and South American ports on Atlantic coast, to transport and war supply work. Congestion in shipping to the east coast of South America, resulting from the large surplus of exports over imports and the withdrawal several months ago of a number of vessels in South American trade for trans-Atlantic service, has been relieved. It was stated that the board stands ready to license exports of any kind to South America, and it was expected that free licensing would prevent future congestion to a large extent.

In July $211,417,000 worth of war savings and thrift stamps were sold, raising the total received from this source since last Dec. 3 to $518,510,000. The July sales alone represented a loan to the government of $2 for every man, woman and child in the country.

Chicago bank clearings last week totaled $508,021,226, a gain of $40,949,762 over those of the corresponding week last year.

Albert Pick & Co.'s business during July exceeded that of the same month a year ago by about 30 per cent, and the gain for the first six months of their fiscal year was about 28 per cent.

Southern Alberta Oil company, limited, has declared an initial dividend of 12 per cent, payable Aug. 31 to stock of record Aug. 26. Southern Alberta Refineries, Ltd., has declared a second annual dividend of 10 per cent, payable Aug. 15 to stock of record Aug. 10. Both companies are controlled by a group of members of the Board of Trade.

LIBERTY 3 1-2S CLOSE AT PAR; RECORD MADE

Other Issues Continue Soft and Finish Lower.

BY GLENN GRISWOLD

Liberty 3½s closed at par, establishing a record for the year and stimulating the buying of all other tax exempt securities. Although other Liberty issues continued soft and closed lower, bankers believe that there will be better buying as the public comes to understand the possibilities of increased taxation.

Income from all issues of Liberty bonds are exempt from taxation up to $5,000 of bonds and the pinch of taxes is coming to the point of making the saving of income tax on $212.50, the income from a $5,000 4¼ per cent Liberty, worth while. Thousands who have sold their Liberties without regard for tax exemption are expected to be purchasers in the future.

Prefer Distant Maturities.

The present tendency of prices is a reversal of that of a few weeks ago. Investors appear to prefer the Liberty issues of the more distant maturities. The third 4¼s, which mature in 1928, now sell to yield better than 4.80 per cent on the investment. Second 4¼s, maturing in 1942, are on an income basis of 4.70, while first 4¼s yield but 4.60.

Otto H. Kahn of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., who returned from a government mission in Spain some time ago, succeeded in arranging with Spanish banks to extend a credit of 600,000,000 pesetas, the equivalent of $120,000,000, to the United States government. Mr. Kahn reported these arrangements to the state department and to the federal reserve board upon his arrival, but the facts were denied at that time.

The loan will be in the form of a commercial credit and will be used to stabilize exchange between the two countries. Part of the credit will be used in paying for supplies purchased in Spain for the American expeditionary forces and the balance will be available to American importers through sales of peseta exchange by the federal reserve banks.

Contradicts Official Denials.

The downward course of Spanish exchange during the last fortnight has contradicted the official denials of a credit arrangement. The peseta, however, is still at a premium of 36 per cent. Efforts will be made during the next Liberty loan campaign to sell the bonds in Spain and add to American credit there. When owned abroad all Liberty issues are tax exempt.

Lee, Higginson & Co. announce that the entire issue of $2,500,000 Peet Bros. Manufacturing Co., five year 7 per cent sinking fund gold notes has been sold to investors. The notes were brought out about two weeks ago.

PUBLIC UTILITIES DESPONDENT AT NEWEST RULING

Decision of Attorney General Brings Wave of Gloom.

Public utility managers and stockholders lapsed into despondency yesterday when the ruling of the attorney general, which will prevent the formation of the proposed utility financing corporation, was announced. The present prospect is that the utilities must rely entirely on what small assistance they may obtain from the War Finance corporation and what money they can obtain in the general market by bidding 10 to 15 per cent for short accommodations and equally severe rates for long term loans.

The only compensating feature of the ruling is the possibility that the seriousness of the situation created will be sufficient to cause state and municipal rate making bodies to grant immediate rate increases to needy companies and perhaps to induce the president to exercise his power of regulation over utilities as a whole.

Apparently Bearing Fruit.

Systematic and concerted efforts on the part of the national public utilities committee to present the case of the utilities to public service commissions and kindred bodies with a view to improving their credit situation through rate increases, etc., is apparently bearing fruit, judging from the latest report of the committee.

There have been reported between Jan. 1 of this year and July 20 between 600 and 700 increases, and relief in other forms has been granted in certain cases. These results, of course, are not all due to activity of the national body working in this direction.

The committee points out that it regards it as particularly essential to present the case of the utilities from the national viewpoint, not from the point of view merely of the local interests of the particular community. It has utilized in the connection the views of President Wilson, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo and Controller of the Currency Williams. The point is made that the public service commissions, when called upon to consider these rate problems, are acting upon a phase of a great national necessity and that favorable action may in many cases affect the country's success in the war.

Opens Way to Higher Rates.

Publication of the opinion of Charles E. Hughes, as referee appointed by the Supreme court of the state of New York, allowing the Brooklyn Borough Gas company to increase its rates and declaring the maximum statutory rate of 80 cents confiscatory, is regarded in public utility circles as important because it may open the way for other gas companies to raise existing rates. The company itself is a small one, serving Coney Island, Flatbush, and Gravesend. The decision actually permits an increase of the rate from 95 cents to $1.25, according to the company's counsel.

All Byllesby electric properties reporting for the week ended July 26 show the following new business gains [net]: 317 customers with 344 kilowatts of lighting and 260 horse power in motors. New business contracted for but not yet connected includes 939 customers, with 315 kilowatts of lighting and 1,763 horse power in motors. Electric energy output shows an increase of 16.7 per cent over the corresponding week a year ago.

The Pacific Gas and Electric company reports for June gross revenues of $1,860,815, an increase of $196,983 over the corresponding month for 1917; net earnings $745,531, an increase of $63,711; net income after fixed charges and preferred dividends $300,349, an increase of $42,699. For the year ended June 30 operating revenue was $20,613,-289, an increase of $1,528,834 over the preceding twelve months; net income after charges and dividends for the period was $1,605,734, a decrease of $913,-612.

CHICAGO STOCK TRANSACTIONS

CHICAGO stocks were irregular, with a generally lower tendency, though exceptions to declines were noted. Stewart-Warner was firm, advancing ⅛, and Commonwealth Edison was up ½. Swift & Co. shares were also firm. The street railroad stocks continued dull. Union Carbide was off ½ and Peoples Gas lost 1 point.

In the bond department the feature was the decline in Commonwealth Edison 5 per cent bonds to 89, the lowest price at which they have sold in years. The loss for the day was ⅜. Apparently the company has not undertaken to buy the bonds and support the market as it is believed done in the case of the stock which was pegged around par. Chicago Railways first mortgage 5s showed improvement of 1½ points. Connecting Railways 5s were steady at 60.

GENERAL MOTORS CONTINUES RISE IN DULL MARKET

Price Changes Elsewhere Limited to Small Fractions.

[New York Times Financial Review.]

New York, Aug. 3.—[Special.]—After the exhibition of dullness supplied by the stock market on Friday it was to be expected that business today, unless stimulated by some unexpected development, would not justify the presence of many brokers on the floor, and the expectation was fully realized. The total transactions offered could easily have been disposed of in the first half hour of the session.

It may be recalled that on the corresponding day a year ago the exchange remained closed as a concession to the suffering caused by a succession of extremely hot days, and it might profitably have closed its doors today by way of recognizing the unimportant use of its facilities made just now.

In such a market price changes are unimportant, resulting as they do from strictly professional operations. The outstanding feature of the session was the continued rise in General Motors, which has again demonstrated the danger of selling short an issue which is so closely held as to be almost impossible of borrowing when the insiders choose to make it uncomfortable for the sellers. General Motors rose 5½ points again on a small turnover, and the premium exacted from borrowers was close to 1 per cent.

Elsewhere price changes were mostly limited to small fractions, with Steel supplying nearly one-third of the day's business, moving through a maximum range of ⅝ and closing higher by 1⅛.

TALK OF THE STREET

IN the early trading stocks responded to the favorable news from the western front. The improvement did not last throughout the session, though the declines were small compared with the high prices. U. S. Steel common has again become barometric of general market sentiment and in the issue trading operations resulted in a net gain of ⅛ over the previous close.

Transactions for the week were around 1,300,000 shares, not much better than one day of good trading. Commission houses take a generally favorable view of the outlook but are not especially bullish for the immediate future. The public does not respond to marking up of prices.

The opinion is growing that banking interests do not favor a rise of consequence at this time. It is so thought because of the action of Steel common. When it gets near 109 it meets with offerings. When it declines a point it is at once pulled back.

Should a decisive result be reported from the western front it would work a change in public sentiment primarily because encouraging and secondarily because of suggesting the beginning of the end and a consequent change in taxation programs.

One market observer said: "I believe the worst a bull has to fear is a little more dullness. I still hold the settled conviction that when that dullness is broken it will make for much higher prices."

A reported canvas of general sentiment in the street is that it shows a strong feeling in active channels that patient waiting for present uncertainties to be converted into more definite forms will bring good buying opportunities to those who are prepared to make investigations into the attractiveness of leading securities. There are rumors of large July and August net earnings of the steel companies, greater in gross than at any time in the history of the steel concerns.

Some commission houses are looking for easier money, though the basis of such expectation is not set forth. The next Liberty loan campaign will begin on Sept. 28. It is the next most important foreseen event. It is possible that the marketing of grain may bring new cash to the banks.

General Motors stock was the feature of the market, showing an advance of 6½ points to 147, with a close 1 point lower. Brokers have been talking about the increase in capital as a bear point, but as soon as the New York stock exchange was formally notified of the proposed increase the stock began to advance. In the preferred issue the expansion will be from $50,000,000 to $100,-000,000 and in the common stock from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000. On the curb Chevrolet Motor rose about 3 points.

Bankers Abandon Plan for Utility Corporation

New York, Aug. 3.—The proposed plan for the organization of a $100,000,000 corporation for the purpose of financing public utility and other companies has been abandoned by Wall street bankers following the receipt of advices that Attorney General Gregory had handed down an opinion declaring that the 10 per cent limitation provided for in the War Finance corporation would apply to the projected concern. Under this ruling the maximum amount which the War Finance corporation could lend to the proposed $100,000,000 company would be $50,000,000, an amount considered too small to make the project worth while.

The committee of bankers, headed by James Noyes Wallace, president of the Central Union Trust company, will now endeavor to devise some other means in an effort to meet the urgent financial requirements of the public utility corporations. One of the plans suggested is that instead of forming one corporation of $100,000,000 capitalization that there be organized five concerns of $20,-000,000 capital each, in which case the maximum advances which could be available from the $500,000,000 War Finance corporation would be $50,000,000 each, or $250,000,000 in the aggregate.

Should such a step be taken it is likely that the corporations would be distributed sectionally, each with an independent management. It is recognized that if the management were the same the establishment of five corporations in place of one would be a mere subterfuge and not acceptable to either the banks or to the government.

LIABILITIES OF RESERVE BANK MEMBERS LESS

Government Withdraws $20,198,052 of Its Deposits.

The weekly statement of the federal reserve bank of Chicago revealed a considerable contraction in the liabilities of member institutions. The bills discounted stood at $238,157,396, a decrease of $656,471 from the high point reached the previous week. The bank also reduced the volume of bills bought in the open market by 50 per cent, the total outstanding being $8,211,409, compared with $16,911,463 the previous week.

The government withdrew $20,198,-052 of its deposits, leaving that item at $18,674,741.

The bank's note circulation declined $7,975,859 from the high mark shown the previous week. The figures:

Gotham Loans Decrease.

The New York bank statement reflected a contraction in credit, there being a decrease of $13,267,000 in loans. There was, however, an increase in deposits of over $39,500,000, but a loss of nearly $12,000,000 in cash caused the surplus reserve to fall away $17,151,-520. That item now stands at $55,235,-190. Government deposits were decreased by $24,867,000. The figures:

Steel Comment.

According to a Wall street market authority: "It does not appeal likely that investors will sell Steel common in the face of the remarkable quarterly report just issued and with knowledge that an even better showing in the current quarter may be expected. The opinion seems to be that so long as the Steel corporation is operating at close to capacity current dividends are assured.

"There has been the best kind of buying of Steel common and a feeling prevails that the stock will sell much higher before the dividend comes off. Part of the $91,000,000 in taxes deducted in the second quarter applied to earnings in the first quarter, so that the company in the second quarter showed a surplus available for the common stock of considerably more than the $7.99 a share reported. One statistician estimated that the profits available for the common were more nearly $11 than $8 a share."

Bradstreet's says
—"Lack of Capital"
A Chief Cause of Failure

We purchased over $51,000,000 of Accounts in 1917 from Manufacturers and Wholesalers — over $20,000,000 came from concerns rated $100,000 to over $1,000,000.

For 24 out of the past 28 years, "Lack of Capital" has been the chief cause of failures—but for the past three years it has ranked only third, notwithstanding the unusual strain upon capital during recent years.

Certainly this improvement must be partly due to the enormous growth of the practice of turning into immediate cash, dead, profitless capital previously tied up in Accounts Receivable.

Under our plan, in a way, you increase your capital simply by releasing that part of it which is tied up in the Accounts of your customers, who do not even pay you interest. We let you collect the Accounts you sell us, without disturbing your customers.

Why divide all your profits with a Partner or Stockholders in order to get more capital, if you have that capital right now in your business, all your own, tied up in your Accounts?

We put that money to work for you and avoid the handicap of "Lack of Capital." The useful object of our business is to help finance increased production of much needed commodities—incidentally making added profits for all concerned.

Let us show you how!

INSURANCE NEWS IN ALL BRANCHES EAST AND WEST

Reinsurance Bureau to Form Additional Unit.

BY THOMAS R. WEDDELL.

Because of the demand for reinsurance facilities, due to the retirement of the German companies and the rapid increases in lines, the reinsurance bureau is preparing to increase its facilities. A committee appointed to consider the proposition has unanimously recommended the formation of another unit of reinsurance, to become operative as soon as the required 100 per cent of subscriptions has been received.

Subscriptions are open to the entire membership and the same rules prevail as in the original bureau. The capacity is to be $200,000 on ordinary risks and $300,000 on fireproof and sprinklered risks. Cessions from members are limited to $10,000 on ordinary and $15,000 on fireproof and sprinklered risks, all on the single cession basis. After Oct. 1 the original bureau will accept single cessions only, limiting the double cessions formerly allowable in case of a larger retention, and the second unit will provide capacity for the risks curtailed by this ruling. On the new unit each company must retain $2,500, which will give it a better classification than the original unit, where the retention was $1,500.

SOCIAL INSURANCE.

At the recent meeting of the American Federation of Labor a special committee was appointed to make a thorough investigation of the personnel, financial resources, and methods of the various organizations which are advocating compulsory social insurance. The American Society for Labor Legislation has been active along this line and its recommendations have been criticized as based upon German models and tending to encourage its bureaucratic form of government. The American Federation of Labor will make an examination of social insurance and will prepare its own bill if such legislation should be regarded as desirable.

INSURANCE NOTES.

The Postal Insurance Underwriters' conference has increased rates on parcel post and unregistered mail insurance, taking effect Sept. 1. The new rates are in multiples of 5 cents, the rate for an unregistered letter or package valued at $25 or less being 5 cents, while a registered letter or government insured parcel post package will be insured for 5 cents up to a value of $50.

The Interstate Mutual Automobile Insurance company of Rock Rapids, Ia., which was organized as an assessment company and was changed to a reserve mutual last year, has been reincorporated on the stock basis. The new company takes over the assets of the mutual and gives extended insurance for nine months to the mutual's policyholders.

The annual meeting of the American Life convention will be held in Chicago Sept. 19 and 20. Gov. Lowden will make an address of welcome on behalf of the state and H. W. Johnson, president of the Central Life of Illinois, on behalf of the Illinois companies.

The employer's liability involved in the recent cavein at the Silver Iron mine of the M. A. Hanna company at Mesaba range has been adjusted at $100,000. It was issued by the Aetna Life and placed in the pool for writing mines.

C. H. Coates, western manager of the National Liberty, accompanied by his wife, has gone to the Dells of Wisconsin for a short vacation.

For the first six months of this year the North American Accident wrote 44,000 new risks as against 37,000 for the same period last year.

PRODUCE TRADE

FRUITS were in ample supply yesterday with a fair business. Peaches are coming from Michigan in limited quantities and sell at a big discount under southern, quality being poorer. Melons were plentiful and market easy. Potatoes sold at lower prices, with increased offerings of home grown, while arrivals from the outside were 43 cars and 95 cars were on track. Live fowls advanced 1c. Spring chickens and broilers were up ½c. Receipts for the week were 13 cars and 4,035 coops of all poultry.

No change was made in egg prices, offerings being liberal. An easier feeling prevailed in the butter market for the low scoring creamery, while the better grades were held at full prices.

COTTON SOARS AGAIN; $6 TO $7 A BALE HIGHER

New York, Aug. 3.—The bull movement in cotton which started immediately after the low government condition figure was issued on Thursday, reached a climax today in one of the biggest advances the market has witnessed in some weeks. Active positions sold $6.00@7.00 a bale higher, representing practically $15 a bale advance since last Thursday morning.

Heavy western, Liverpool, southern, and spot house buying were features of the upturn, the short interest showing a good deal of alarm over the character of weather news as well as the favorable war reports and a cable stating that Lancashire cotton mills are to be permitted to run more hours weekly and use increased machinery.

The latter was considered of much significance in view of the report current a few days ago that arrangements had been made for shipping to accommodate exports of between 125,000 and 140,000 bales of cotton to the United Kingdom during August.

Fall River sales of print cloths for the week were 100,000 pieces, against 120,000 last year, and curtailment 120,000, compared with 300,000 a year ago. Futures:

Investors Must Demand Their Rights

The chorus of protests that has risen against the contract which the railroad administration is trying to force the companies to sign has had only one result thus far. It has stopped some of the leaks by which details of the negotiations were escaping. There are no indications yet of any satisfactory change in the demands.

It seems amazing at first sight that the government should take control of the railroads on a promise of a certain compensation to their owners and that, a few weeeks later, representatives of the government should steadily refuse to fulfill the promise. The situation is, however, the logical outgrowth of what has been going on for two decades. Investors in general and owners of rail securities in particular have been the victims of steadily increasing aggression. Politicians have found it profitable to advocate the rights of "the people" to low fares and low freight rates irrespective of the cost of operating the roads.

Now at last investors are beginning to combine in defense of their property. The Association of Owners of Railroad Securities is taking part in the present negotiations. It refuses to accept the proposed contract and the railway presidents will hardly be induced to sign it in defiance of the owners' wishes. In this association are now most of the holders of large amounts of railway stocks and bonds, including heads of life insurance companies, whose funds are thus invested.

If every holder of rail securities and every owner of a policy in a life company owning blocks of railway bonds will aid in the work the politicians will see a new light. At least 10,000,000 people are vitally interested in railway securities. Let them continue to demand fair treatment.

Midwest Refining.

F. H., Bluffton, O.—The Midwest Refining company has issued $25,558,350 of stock in shares of $50 par. Its report for 1917 shows earnings of 45 per cent on capital, compared with 42 per cent in 1916, on $20,000,000 of capital. Its refining capacity now is much larger than a year ago and earnings are said to be proportionately larger. It buys oil on long term contracts from the Midwest Oil company and controls the Merritt Oil corporation, which has a large area of productive oil lands. Dividends of 8 per cent are paid, making the yield less than 4 per cent at present market prices.

Middle West Utilities.

C. F.—The Middle West Utilities company made such a large gain in gross earnings in the year ended April 30 last that increasing costs of operation were more than offset and net earnings showed a small increase. The gross income of the holding company was $1,955,211. After deducting $675,373 for interest, $194,922 for administration expense, and $43,314 for miscellaneous items there was left $1,041,602. This covered the 6 per cent dividend on $12,000,000 of preferred stock about one and one-half times. Dividends of 2 per cent in cash and 2 per cent in stock were paid on the $9,784,900 of common stock. This latter dividend was not quite all earned.

Cudahy Notes.

P. V.: The Cudahy Packing company is issuing $10,000,000 five year notes for the purpose of reducing its bank loans and thus increasing working capital. A sinking fund of 15 per cent will retire 60 per cent of the issue before maturity. The notes are junior to $8,747,300 of first mortgage bonds and are followed by $8,550,500 of preferred and $11,449,500 of common stock. The company contracts to maintain net quick assets equal to at least double the amount of notes outstanding. In view of the sinking fund and the present unusually large earnings of the company, also its long record as a dividend payer, these notes are well secured.

Brief Answers.

P. F.—The bonds of the French republic outstanding in the United States are secured by collateral and are a conservative investment. The income tax rate for this year is not known. Congress is now fixing it. Your other questions are not of general interest. Send stamped envelope for answer.

G. H. T.—No record is found of old Prompter Gold and Silver mine. Few productive mines live forty years. Unproductive ones die young.

T. J. S.—United Eastern at last accounts had known reserves sufficient to last about three years. How much more may be developed is unknown.

NEW CORPORATIONS.

The following applications for incorporations were filed in the office of Secretary of State Emmerson in Springfield yesterday:

Consumers' Glove Manufacturing company, Chicago; capital, $10,000; incorporators, Lawrence M. Fine, Tillie Glass, and G. S. Fins.

Farmers' Grain Company of Girard, Girard; capital, $20,000; incorporators, Joseph L. Alford, John A. Warrick, Horace H. Rutherford.

South Side Teaming company, Chicago; capital, $10,000; incorporators, L. E. Brown, Harry L. Baldwin, and Ernest O. Best.

Ide Patents corporation, Springfield; capital increased from $5,000 to $50,000.

COMMERCIAL FAILURES LESS.

There were 143 commercial failures this week in the United States, against 162 last week and 247 last year, according to R. G. Dun & Co.

PACKARD TWIN SIX

Safeguarding the Packard Owner's Investment

THE purchase of a motor car by men of affairs today is the result of business judgment rather than sporting instinct.

Property, as well as business, is divided into essentials and non-essentials.

Intrinsic value, dependability, a continuing service of a high order, coupled with an organization which includes a Packard owner from the moment he purchases his car, has served to place the Packard Twin Six in the class of "essential property."

There can be no question of the usefulness of the Packard in these times. And in the train mileage saved by the Packard there is no undue use of man-power to keep them in service.

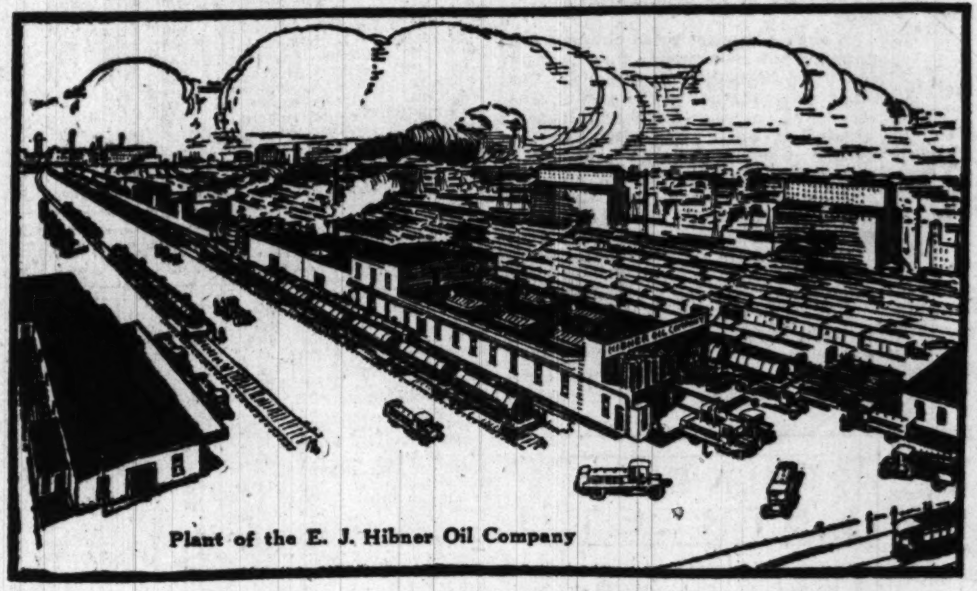
the purpose of this increase being to enable this concern to take care of its growing business resulting from War's unusual demand for Oil Products.



Plant of the E. J. Hibner Oil Company

Nature of the E. J. Hibner Oil Co.'s Business

This company engages in the refining, manufacturing and distribution of petroleum products, paints and varnish, oils and kindred products, in which business it has been successfully engaged for the past 20 years.

This company has just acquired the $100,000 plant and the established business of the Keystone Oil and Mfg. Co., thereby doubling its trackage and its manufacturing and delivering capacity.

It now has two large, well equipped manufacturing and storage plants located in the northwest side of the city—valuable private switch tracks—complete delivery equipment, consisting of tank cars, 10 tank motor trucks and seven wagons—carrying its products to all parts of the city.

It also has a large and continually increasing trade among large manufacturers, service stations, garages and stores throughout the city.

1914	$5,300.00	9%	1916	$22,500.00	18 %
1915	9,560.00	12%	1917	33,000.00	19½%

Last Year This Company Paid a Dividend of 19½%

Lost year—1917—The E. J. Hibner Oil Company did a gross business of $350,000 on a capital of $33,000—that is, its total business amounted to over 10 times the amount of its paid-in capital—and on this business it paid its stockholders a dividend of 19½%.

The present offer increases the capital stock from $50,000 to $150,000. This low capitalization is unusual—taking into consideration the valuable properties, large going business and continued growth of this concern. The increase in working capital will permit doubling the volume of business next year with a corresponding increase in earnings and dividends.

This Company Does Not Drill for Oil

A Manufacturing and Marketing Organization

The E. J. Hibner Oil Company has no connection with the drilling of oil wells or the production of oil. It buys the oil which has already been produced, refines it and markets the products thus obtained. It is strictly a manufacturing and marketing organization. This is the same kind of business that has resulted in the immense profits made by the Standard Oil Company.

It may generally be said that the large and continued profits of the petroleum business are found in the refining and marketing of oil products—not in the prospecting and drilling end of the business, which in a great many instances has resulted in loss to the investor.

That the manufacturing and marketing of oil is the safest and most profitable generally for stockholders is in part proved by the fact that such concerns as the Sinclair, the Cosden, the Gypsy, and other large oil companies have, after their first large development stage has been passed, been converted into manufacturing and marketing organizations which purchase production from smaller companies that are drilling wells in the different oil fields.

The Demand for Oil Products

The demand for Petroleum Products, Lubricating Oils, Greases and other industrial essentials, such as are handled by the E. J. Hibner Oil Company, is enormous. This demand is growing daily. It is only a question of supplying the demand fast enough. The concern which does its part in meeting this demand can rest assured of getting all the business it can handle at an excellent profit. Act at once. Call us up, or fill in the coupon and mail today.

The E. J. Hibner Oil Company Is an Illinois Corporation

This company has back of it 24 years of continual operation. It is today a going and growing concern. Its officers and directors are all conservative, experienced and successful business men, whose records will bear the closest investigation.

The President and Treasurer—Mr. M. J. Votava is a man of long experience in the oil business, having been active in all branches of the business for 14 years. His training includes valuable refining experience gained while Secretary and Treasurer of the New Process Refining Company of Joliet, Illinois.

The Vice President—Mr. L. F. Shane has been prominent in Insurance circles for the past 20 years. He is now connected with the well-known firm of Shayne & Cullerton, located in the Insurance Exchange Bldg.

The Secretary—Mr. F. F. Perner was for many years Chief Auditor for the American Naval Stores Company, a concern dealing in turpentine and pine tree products. He is considered one of the most expert Oil Accountants in the country.

Every Little Dime Saved Is a Stitch in Time

Mid-Summer Items of the Shows and Showmen

Percy Mackaye has written and Arthur Hopkins will produce a play called "Washington, the Man Who Made Us," dealing with the days and characters of the American revolution. Though Mr. Mackaye is a poet, the drama is in prose, and it is divided into sixteen "actions" and fourteen "transitions." Among these are shown Washington paying court to Martha Custis, Washington crossing the Delaware, Washington freezing at Valley Forge, and the unfurling of Betsy Ross' first flag. Robert Edmond Jones, decorator of the impending "Garden of Paradise," will design the scenes and costumes.

"Pittsburgh—It was so warm that Mrs. Fiske found sufficient excuse to push her desire for solitude to extreme limits. We searched the theater for her without results, but at last discovered her on the roof. She was dressing on the roof. She is a most feminine, darling person, and why she withdraws her gentle self from us is a Sam Lloyd puzzle. Good-by, Mrs. Fiske. I know now how Dante felt at never knowing Beatrice."

Meow!

In the dramatization of Mrs. Rinehart's war tale, "The Amazing Interlude," Miss Marie Doro will impersonate the ineffable Saralee, who served soup to the soldiers and fell in love with the Belgian spy.

The plans of John D. Williams contemplate these productions for the coming season:

Oscar Wilde's "An Ideal Husband," with Norman Trevor, Cyril Harcourt, Constance Collier, and Beatrice Beckley.

Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead."

"Beyond the Horizon," by Eugene O'Neill.

"All Souls' Eve," by Anne Crawford Flexner.

"The Song of the City," by Rachel Butler.

"Among Those Present," with Cyril Keightley, A. E. Anson, Hassard Short, W. B. Mack, and Marjorie Patterson.

"Sawdust and Sentiment," by L. B. Yates.

"All Wrong," a dramatization of William S. McNutt's "A Burglar's Feelings," by W. H. Post.

Laurette Taylor in "Happiness."

George Arliss in "Hamilton."

Alexandre Carlisle in "A Country Cousin," formerly "The Ohio Lady," beginning here on Labor day.

Booth Tarkington's "Penrod."

William A. Brady announces the following enterprises:

"I. O. U.," by Willard Mack and Hector Turnbull, with Mary Nash.

Alice Brady in "Forever After," by Owen Davis.

"The Chinese Puzzle," by Marion Bower and Leon Lion, now playing in London.

"Human Nature," by Owen Davis.

The Frohman company has obtained the American rights to "Nurse Benson," in which Miss Marie Lohr is playing in London.

Glen MacDonough and Reginald De Koven have delivered a musical play named "Yesterday" to the Messrs. Shubert.

After Fiske O'Hara's engagement at the Olympic in "Marry in Haste," Messrs. Smith and Golden will present "Turn to the Right" again, beginning Aug. 25. The cast will include Jason Robards, Joe Smith Marba, Mabel Bert, Helen Collier, Barry McCormack, and Jessie Glendinning.

"Oh Look!" which will open the La Salle's season Tuesday night is James Montgomery's farce, "Ready Money," set to verse and music by Joseph McCarthy and Harry Caroll. The songs include "It's a Long Road to Peacock's," "Carolina," "A Kiss for Cinderella," "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows," "I Don't Remember Now," and "Do You Want to Marry?"

Mr. Tinney, though his leg is broken and he has had trouble with the Shuberts, retains his sense of humor. He appeared at the Palace last night on two crutches, one labeled "Lee," the other "Jake," and the box which inclosed his wounded member was inscribed "A Typical Morosco Cast."

Marc Klaw is explicably inconsolable over the hostile attitude of the congressional tax-layers toward the theater. They propose to double the levy on theater seats. "It looks to me," says Mr. Klaw, "as if congress, despite all the valuable aid given by the theaters to the various war activities, is bent on legislating us out of existence. With the advance in railroad fares, the penalty on sleeping car tickets, which no theatrical company can avoid; the doubling of the license, and the 100 per cent increase in the tax on the public, they are killing the goose that lays the golden eggs."

Another falsetto item has been added to our effeminate battle hymnology. It is named "Hello, Central, Give Me No Man's Land," and its contents are worse than its caption indicates. It seems that the only literate he-songs inspired by this war are Mr. Cohan's "Over There," Mr. Carpenter's "Khaki Sammy" and "The Long, Long Trail," a sad hymn but a brave one.

It may be said for the Marines that they do not sing "America, Here's My Boy," or "A Baby's Prayer at Twilight for Its Dadda Over There." In army and navy garrisons hard-by Chicago such mincing castrata are to be heard; but never in the barracks of the "devil-dogs." The musical outcries of those soldiers are male, and though they may be rough, they sound of bristles and bowels rather than of slaps upon the wrist. The captain who hears his men singing "And if I had another he'd march beside his brother," and does not interfere, is suspect; and his function is in a harem, not an army.

An imposing coterie of dramatic eleemosynaries are in Chicago preliminary to the production of "The Garden of Paradise" at the Studebaker Aug. 12. Besides the noteworthy troupe of actors and actresses we have with us Mr. Sheldon, the author. Mr. Janney, the impresario; Mrs. Norman Hapgood, the general scrutator; Mr. Eagle, the stage director, and Mr. Robert Edward Jones, the scene painter and dress designer.

Had it not been for the patriotic generosity of A. H. Woods, the New York showman, the soldiers and sailors of the barracks adjacent to Chicago would be without free entertainment today. "Friendly Enemies," though it has been performed previously for the army and the navy, will be played again this afternoon at the Woods, and men in uniform will be more than welcome.

Secretary Baker makes this announcement concerning Smileage:

"The nation-wide Smileage sale is a contribution from the people of the United States to the contentment, effectiveness, and future usefulness of our soldiers. It is a part of the great effort the government is making to surround our soldiers with wholesome environment. It is an important part of the work of the commission on training camp activities."

Banks and stores in 5,000 towns are now handling the sale of Smileage, but if you wish to send a book of smiles to a soldier, and you are not in touch with one of these, write to Harold Braddock, director of Smileage, war department commission on training camp activities, Washington.

In order to overcome railroad difficulties in routing shows over the Liberty circuit, Mr. A. G. Simmons, assistant general passenger agent of the Lehigh Valley railroad (the very best man for the job) has been assigned to act as railroad traffic counselor to the war department commission on training camp activities. He will be located in the New York office of the commission at 1520 Broadway.

"Seven Days' Leave," imminent at the Garrick, is a British melodrama of the war, showing in its animated procedure the gun deck of an American cruiser, United States troops dedicating a shrine in an English churchyard, and other magnetic episodes appropriate to the time. In it there is a German spy, who steals the plans of the fortifications, and Lady Mary Heather, an intrepid Englishwoman, swimming far out at sea to thwart such villains as may be current in the secret service of the Teutonic powers. The play begins Sept. 1.

Lew Fields, running true to gossip, is about to enter one of the "Friendly Enemies" troupes, but Mr. Weber has refused to bear out the prognosticators and will continue as an impresario. The Fields company, with Charles Winninger in the Sam Bernard rôle, will open in Boston the last week of this month. Plans for a purposed Weber-Fields return in musical comedy have accordingly been abandoned.

Charles Dillingham, F. Ziegfeld Jr., and Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger have formed a producing affiliation to undertake theatrical projects in a big way. Raymond Hitchcock will be one of their stars.

Mr. Kaufman in the New York Times today says that Mr. Hitchcock, even in the palmy days of the first "Hitchy-Koo," was not accumulating funds as he should have been. Good natured, generous, and always a good fellow, Mr. Hitchcock paid his people the salaries they asked—an error of which the commercial manager is rarely guilty—and so made only a fraction of the fortune which should have been his.

That fortune he promptly invested in two bad musical productions and a lease of a theater; and the combination not only obliterated all the "Hitchy-Koo" profits but plunged the actor deeply into debt. The seventeen weeks during which he was the lessee of the Fulton theater in New York were seventeen weeks of loss. Notwithstanding the fact that economy had become a necessity by the time the second "Hitchy-Koo" was produced, Mr. Hitchcock put that entertainment together with an improvidence even greater than that which had characterized his previous productions. An instance of this is the fact that he agreed to pay Leon Errol $1,500 weekly—$1,000 for his services as an actor and $500 weekly for his labors in staging the piece. A stage director is commonly paid a salarly only during the weeks of rehearsal.

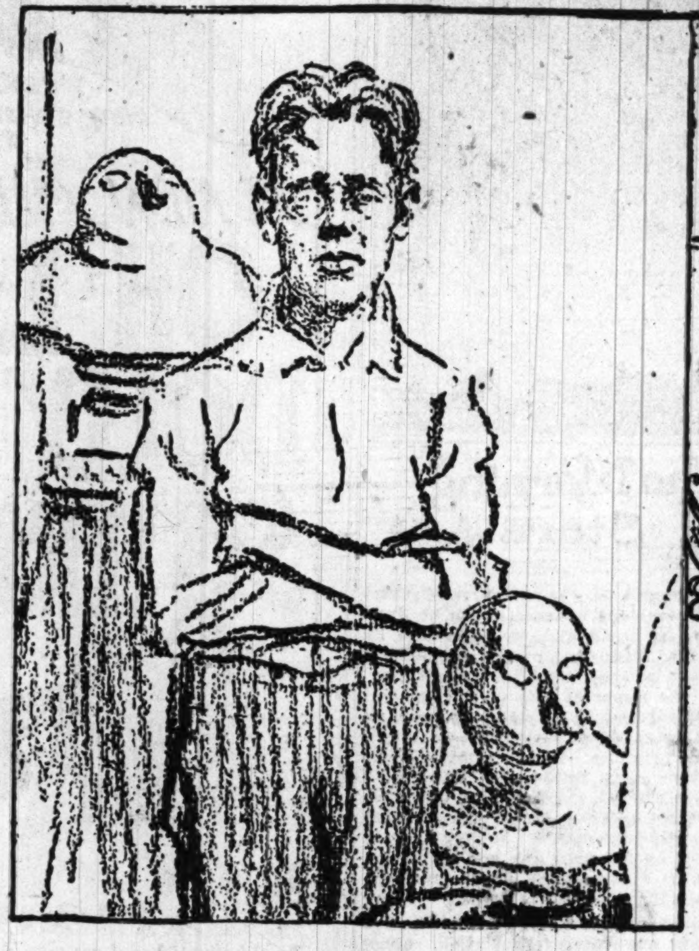
The scale on which the 1918 "Hitchy-Koo" was produced, in fact, brought the weekly cost of operation to about $13,000. Discounting the matinées, which are rarely played to capacity in the case of a musical show, the piece could draw some $14,000 by crowding the house every night. This slight margin of $1,000 had, of course, to be applied on the original cost of production, and even at this rate it would have required many weeks for the return of the original investment. The week before last there occurred the hot weather, which caused the weekly receipts to drop to $9,000, and in the absence of a reserve fund the recourse to K. & E. became inevitable.

Mr. Hitchcock's difficulty with Mr. Errol was entirely independent of this major ailment. The agreement between the two regarding the manner in which Mr. Errol should be advertised was at the root of the trouble, and inasmuch as there was no prospect of agreement on the question it seemed wise for the pair to separate. Matters never reached a critical point between the two, and during the last week—the show's final one in its present form—the pair continued to share the star dressing room in all amicability. When the piece reopens in Boston late in the month, however, Mr. Errol will be among those missing.

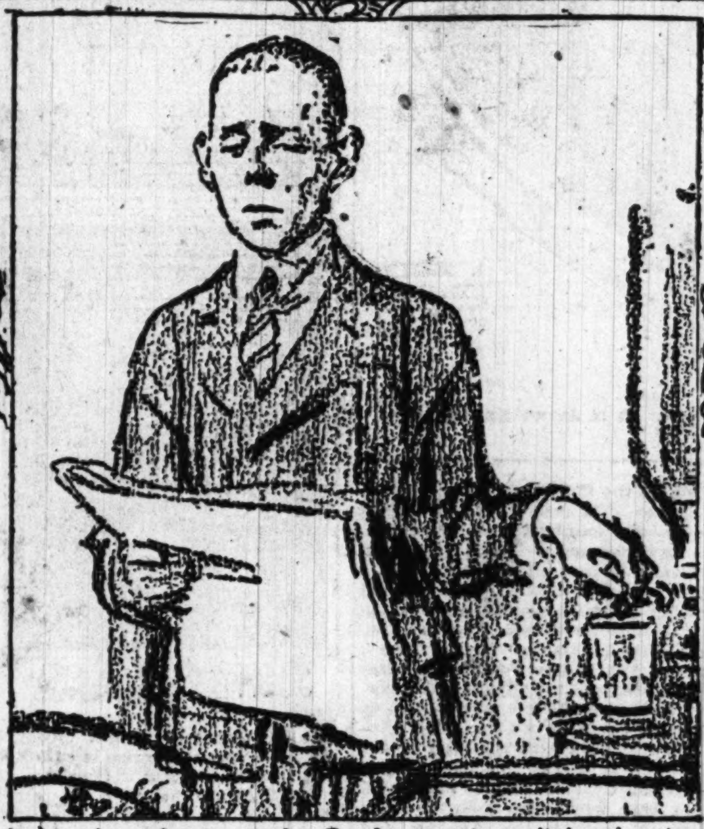
AMONG US MORTALS

SOME WAR PORTRAITS

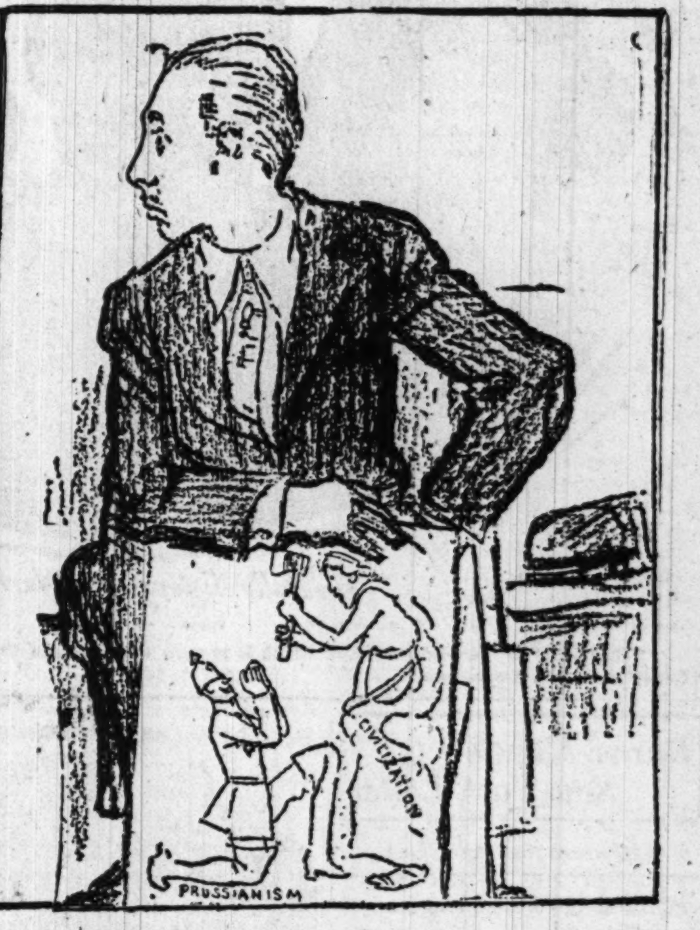
By W. E. HILL



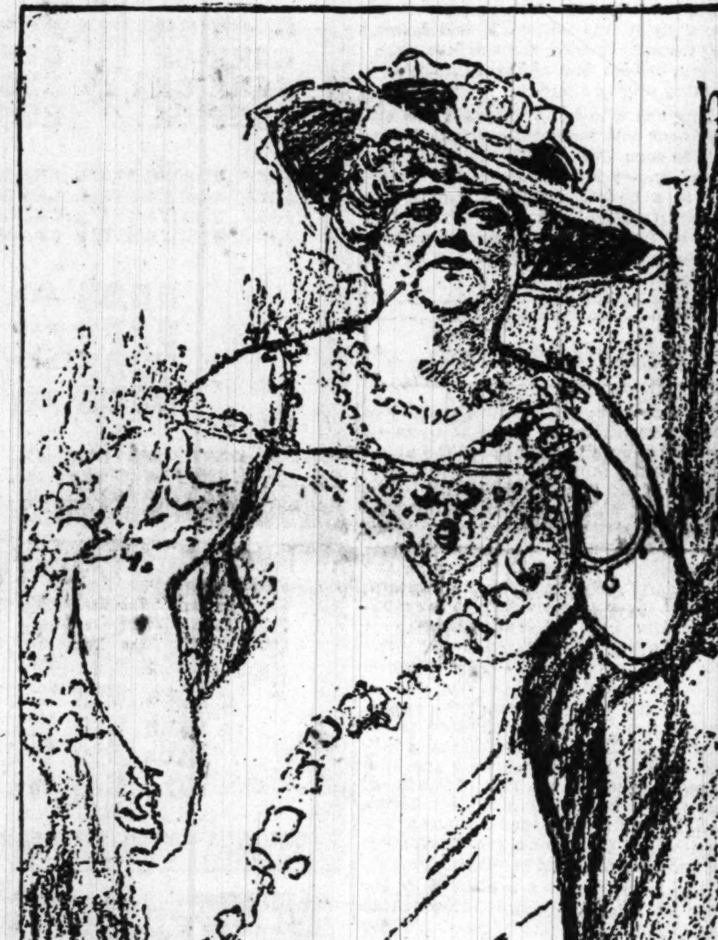
Francis Finch, who does those awfully clever modern art portrait busts, has offered his services to an army hospital in case any wounded soldiers' faces need remodelling. Says Francis, "This war is beginning to 'get me' (likewise the draft) and I wanna do something!"



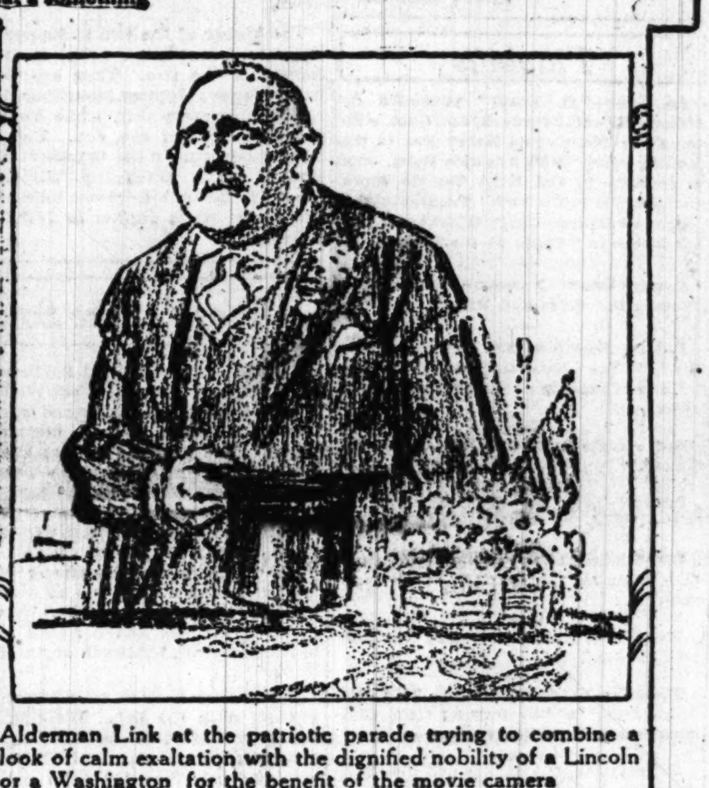
Archie, the eighteen-a-week office boy, getting a little relaxation with the boss's sporting final. Archie may not be much to brag about around an office, but he can't be drafted for five years, and that's something



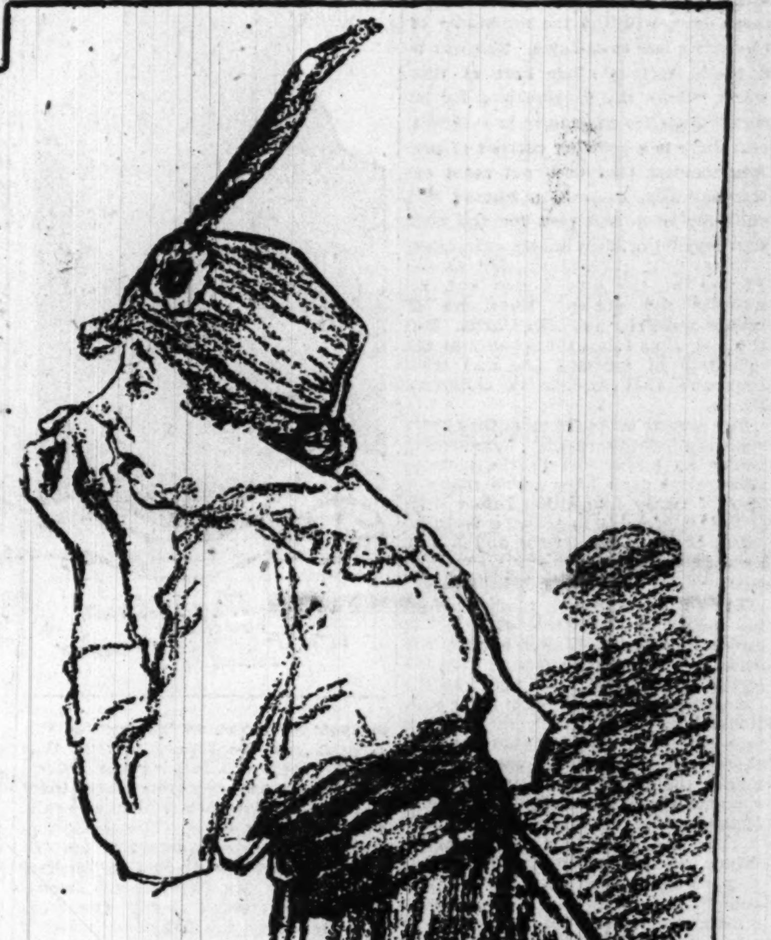
The patriotic Lambert Cuffe, who hopes to be sent over as the American "Bairnsfather," making a call on the War Department



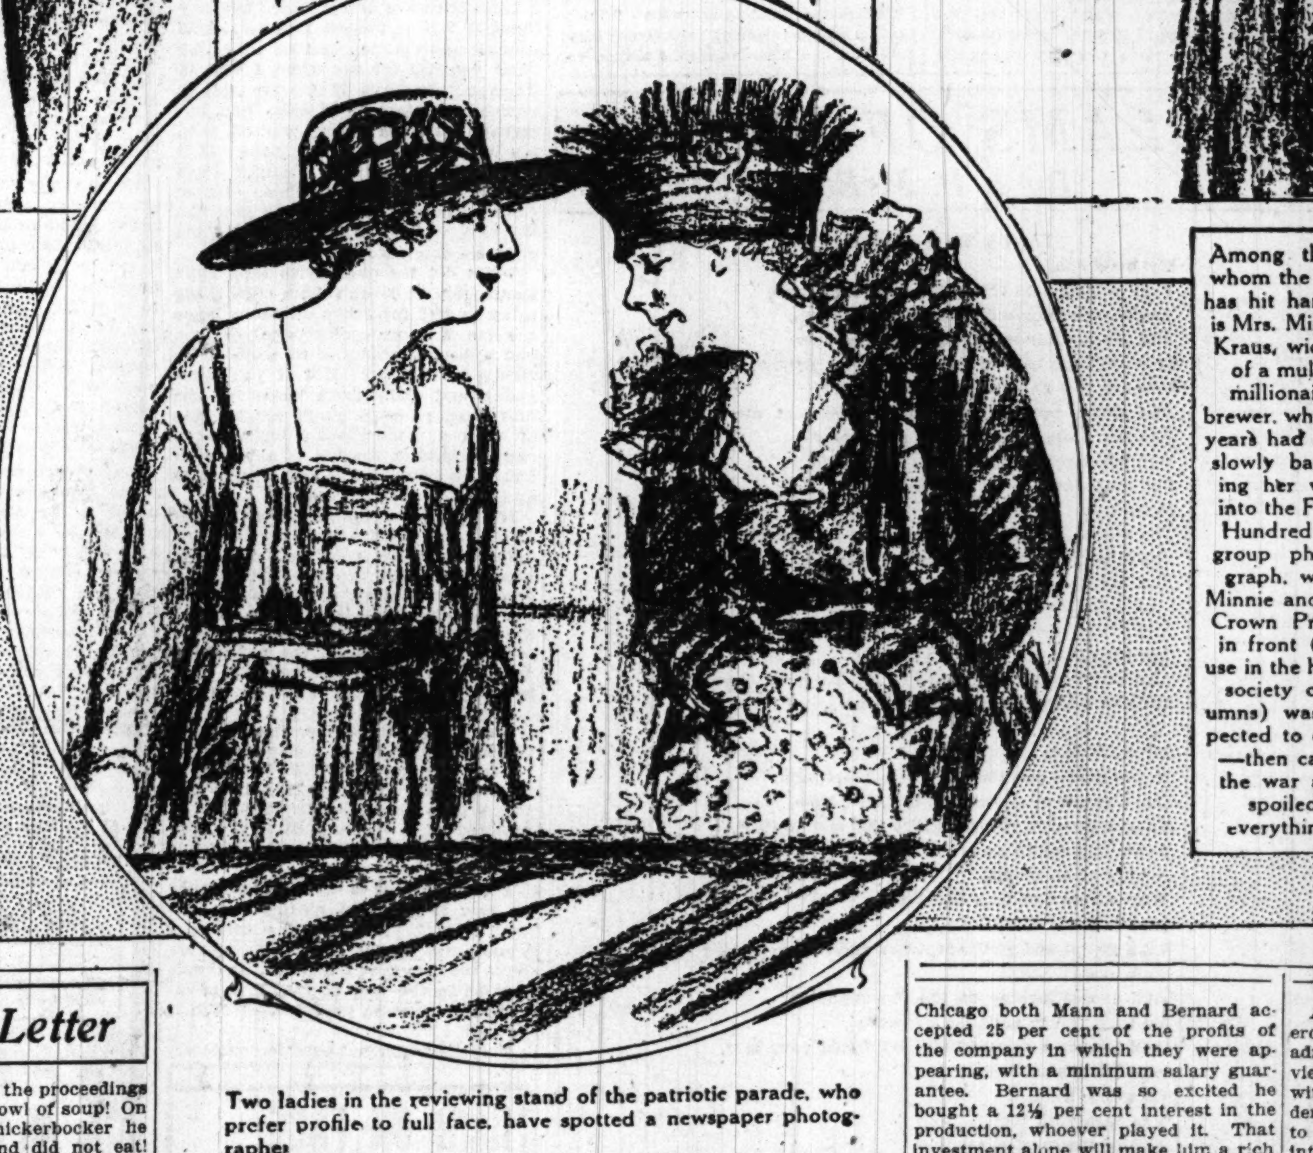
The sentimental Miss Sniffin, who never does anything by halves, weeping quarts after presenting a doughboy with a rose to take to France. Much more soul satisfying—to Miss Sniffin—than a package of cigarettes or a cake of chocolate



Alderman Link at the patriotic parade trying to combine a look of calm exaltation with the dignified nobility of a Lincoln or a Washington for the benefit of the movie camera



Among those whom the war has hit hardest is Mrs. Minnie Kraus, widow of a multi-millionaire brewer, who for years had been slowly battering her way into the Four Hundred A group photograph, with Minnie and the Crown Prince in front (for use in the home society columns) was expected to do it—then came the war and spoiled everything!



Two ladies in the reviewing stand of the patriotic parade, who prefer profile to full face, have spotted a newspaper photographer

Burns Mantle's New York Letter

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Now the story comes out. Albert Herman Woods, showman, is the real cause of the "Friendly Enemies" furore. Sam Bernard and Louis Mann are mere lay figures with laughs up their sleeves. It was Mr. Woods who discovered and encouraged the writing of the play. It was Woods who cast it and produced it. It was Woods who outlined the advertising campaign that has kept the alleged enmities of the two stars the subject of trivial but persistent discussion in the newspapers. It was Woods who arranged with the speculators to take over $60,000 worth of the best seats for the first eight weeks of the New York run, which has just begun. And it is Woods who will profit to the extent of a fortune or two from the success.

And on just how trivial an incident do you suppose the injection of the Woods personality into the proceedings rested? On a missed bowl of soup! On a luncheon at the Knickerbocker he had planned to eat and did not eat! As he entered the grill room he met one of the authors of the play, had his curiosity piqued, and his jealousy subconsciously stirred by the latter's statement that he was about to sell the idea to a rival manager, and immediately lost his appetite.

This was last January. Bernard and Samuel Shipman, who wrote the comedy with Aaron Hoffman, were fortifying themselves with food against the test of a meeting with Arthur Hopkins. Hopkins, regarded in the profession as a highbrow, is suspected of not caring a great deal for German comedians or dialect comedy. The Hopkins appointment was for 2 o'clock. It was then 1:30. "Tell me about the play," suggested Woods. "We will, if Hopkins doesn't like it," said Shipman. "Tell me now," insisted Woods; "it isn't 2 yet." "You haven't had your lunch," suggested Bernard. "I don't want any lunch," declared Woods.

So they went down to the Woods offices, which are practically next door to those of Hopkins, and there the plot of what became "Friendly Enemies" was outlined—and tentatively sold.

At 2 Shipman rushed over to keep his Hopkins appointment. He found Arthur missing. He might be on his way back, but the phone clerk thought he probably was playing golf. Shipman didn't wait. One manager in the hand is worth a dozen on the links. Back he rushed to the Woods office. Louis Mann had joined the party. Woods agreed to take the play and pay the customary advance royalties. The comedians, who were tied up with vaudeville contracts, insisted it had to be written in a hurry. Shipman thereupon asked for a collaborator. Aaron Hoffmann was agreed upon.

Shipman and Hoffman went to Atlantic City and the play was written in two weeks—five days is the actual time spent on it, they say. Three weeks later it was produced and pronounced fit. Before it was taken to Chicago both Mann and Bernard accepted 25 per cent of the profits of the company in which they were appearing, with a minimum salary guarantee. Bernard was so excited he bought a 12½ per cent interest in the production, whoever played it. That investment alone will make him a rich man. A richer man, perhaps we should say, seeing that he is already pretty well established financially. German comedians being a glut on the present wartime market, Woods will have his pick of the field with which to furnish forth four or five "Friendly Enemies" companies the coming winter. It will be one of those "quick clean-ups" on which Broadway Country club members love to expatiate.

During its first week in New York "Friendly Enemies" has equaled its first success in Chicago. The audiences have been huge, despite the heat. It was a bigger first week than "Potash & Perlmutter," another of the Woods' inspirations, enjoyed.

Also the comedians have been generously interviewed on their love and admiration for each other. One interviewer found them set for the ordeal with Louis' arm around Sam's shoulder. Another tried his best to get them to talk of other things, but found them intent on the subjects agreed upon, Mann's superior acting and Bernard's wonderful comedy.

Their first night receptions were duly timed. Each entered singing, that the audience might be prepared for his coming. Louis was never more ardent in the enthusiasm of his love for Sam. He hugged him and shook him, and threatened frequently to kiss him. And Sam smiled through his perspiration and his grease paint as though he was extremely grateful. Still the report persists that off stage they will have none of each other. It doesn't matter which report is true. So long as they can keep one or the other going they

A LOVELY NEW EVENING DRESS

"I had an evening dress of a heavy white Chinese silk crepe, beautifully embroidered. It was dirty and I was tired of the style, but the material was still as lovely as ever. I did not want to spend the money for having it cleaned and remodeled too. I cut out the cleaner's bill by washing it myself in Lux. As I ripped it all apart before washing it, the material was as fresh and soft as when it was brand new. The washing was next to no work, and incidentally, I made the dress over for about what I would have paid for having it cleaned."

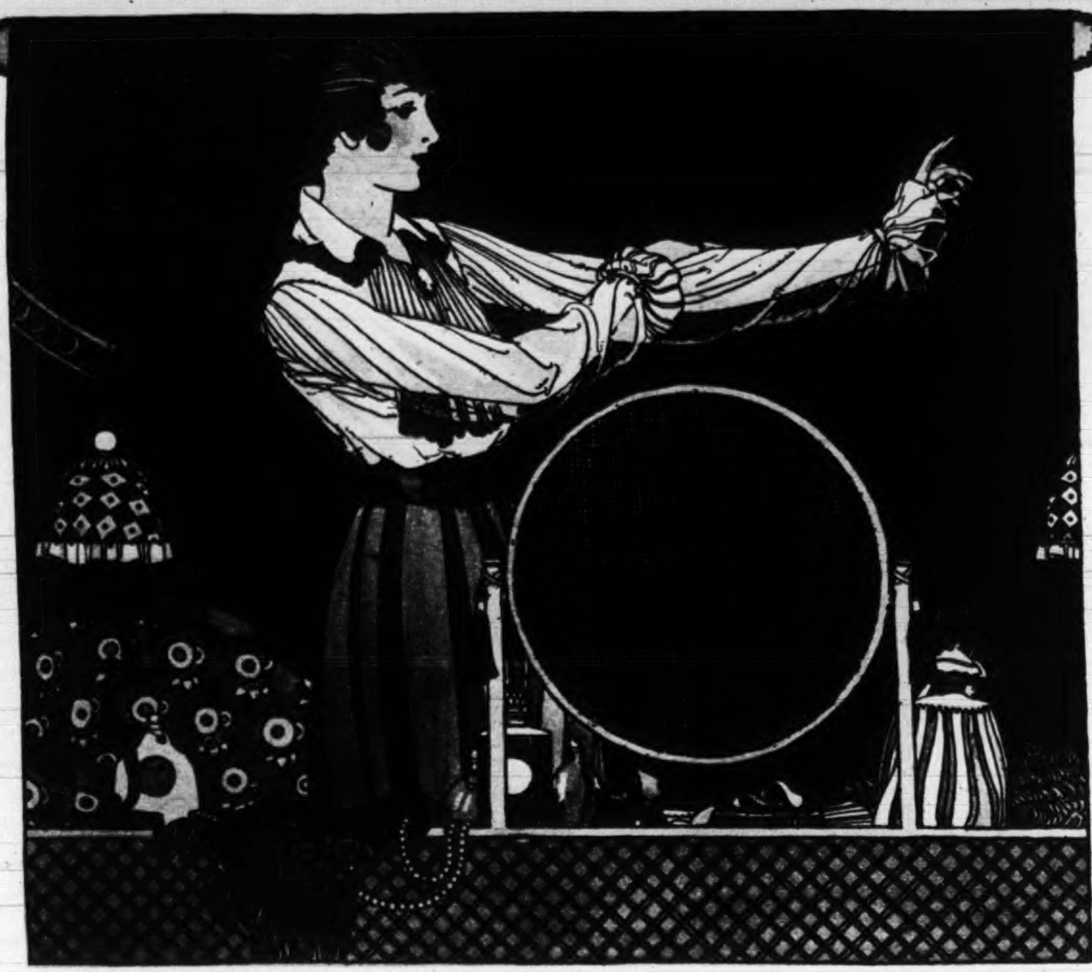
TWO DELICATE SILK WAISTS

"I had a chance to try Lux on two very delicate silk waists. They came out beautifully. I shall never be without Lux."

Mrs. C. L. Skinner, Somerville, Mass.



Won't Shrink Sweaters

WASHED A NICE WOOL SWEATER

"I washed a nice sweater (all wool) with Lux without shrinking it at all."

Mrs. E. R. Blanchard, Quincy, Mass.

A SOILED CHINCHILLA COAT

"I overheard one girl telling another, who was wearing a soiled chinchilla sport coat, to try Lux. She had washed hers. Her mother was afraid to have her try it, but it was old, so she did and it came out beautifully. She told every little detail—to be sure and dissolve a little Lux in the last rinsing, and not to rub!"

Miss M. Ashland, New York City

BABY'S SHIRTS UNSHRUNKEN

"I have used Lux for washing baby's all-wool shirts, bands and stockings, and find it way ahead of anything I have ever used, keeping them very soft and not shrinking them."

Mrs. V. H. Deming, East Douglas, Mass.

"Three times to the cleaner's and you've paid for it all over again."

Do you know how I came to use it? Through Louise. She came in one afternoon looking her prettiest in such a dear little blouse. Have you seen it? A little flesh-colored Georgette, with one of those fluffy, frilly, lace jabots.

"I admired it, of course, and then I showed her my new white crepe de Chine. 'But isn't it wicked,' I said, 'to have to send it to the cleaners? By the time you have had it cleaned three times, you have paid for it all over again!'

"'You don't mean to say you send it to the cleaners!' she said.

"'Why of course,' I answered, 'you wouldn't trust crepe de Chine to soap and water, would you?'

"'Of course not!' she said. 'I use Lux.'"

That is typical of the way the story of Lux is carried from one woman to another. As a matter of fact, Lux is the most modern form of soap—but it is so new, so different from anything you have ever known as soap that you think of it as something in a class entirely by itself.

And that is precisely what Lux is

There is "nothing like it." You hear that wherever Lux is mentioned.

The miracle of Lux is that it comes in delicate, transparent, pure flakes which dissolve the moment you drop them into hot water. Immediately you whisk them into such a foamy, bubbling lather as you have always longed for. Into the rich white suds, you drop your most delicate blouse.

Afraid? Not for a second! Lux never hurt anything that pure water alone would not injure.

Then you let your blouse soak for a few minutes. Never a bit of rubbing. You simply dip your blouse up and down in the warm, pure suds, press the gentle cleansing suds again and again through the precious fabric. Every speck of dirt is carried out of it into the suds, without a bit of injury to a single delicate thread! Then rinsings — once, twice, three times—till every trace of the suds is out of the fabric, and your blouse is yours again just as new and fresh and dainty as the day you bought it.

Wonderful? Indeed it is, and Lux is every bit as easy to use as it sounds. "That's the beauty of Lux," women say. "It's so easy." Fabrics have been becoming sheerer and sheerer every year. Women have been learning to wear daintier and daintier things for everyday use.

And oh, the care and expense of such things till Lux came to make them really practical and inexpensive. No need to send your dainty things to the cleaners. Anything that pure water won't injure, Lux will make new for you in a few minutes.

It isn't washing that hurts sheer fabrics. It's rubbing soap on them and rubbing them again to get the soap and dirt out, that wears and tears them—takes away their finish with the first washing.

That's the old-fashioned way—the way that made you dread trusting your precious things to "soap and water."

Every woman who tries Lux wonders how she ever could have rubbed soap on anything she valued — realizes instantly what a world of things there are that she herself can cleanse, oh, so easily and so perfectly!

Now she buys the dainty things she loves to have, and wears them often. They are not a bit of care to her. She keeps them fresh and new the Lux way—simply dips them up and down in the pure Lux suds with never a bit of rubbing to injure them.

Won't you try Lux in your home? Get a package today at your grocer's, druggist's or department store.

Learn how many, many lovely things you can now enjoy for everyday use.

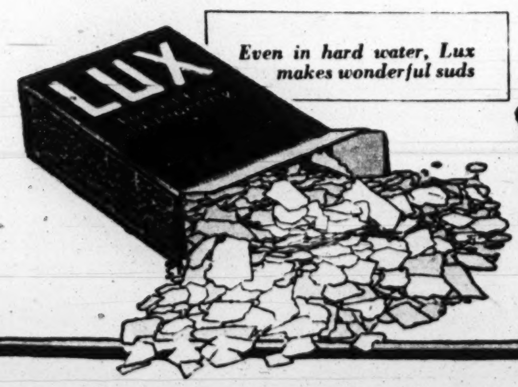
LUX

HOW TO WASH SILKS

Use a tablespoonful of Lux to a gallon of water. Dissolve in boiling or very hot water and whisk into a thick lather. Add cold water till lukewarm. Dip your garment through the foamy lather many times. Work it about in the suds—squeezing the suds through the soiled parts, but do not rub. Rinse in three waters the same temperature as the water in which you washed it. Squeeze the water out—do not wring. Dry in the shade. When nearly dry, press on the wrong side with a warm iron—never a hot one. Press crepes from side to side, and stretch a little as you press.



Even in hard water, Lux makes wonderful suds

HOW TO WASH WHITE WOOLENS

Use two tablespoonfuls to a gallon of water. Dissolve the Lux flakes in boiling or very hot water and whisk into a rich lather. Put your woolens in, and let them soak until the water is comfortable for the hands. Then squeeze the suds through them, but do not rub. Rinse in three waters the same temperature as the water in which you washed them, and dissolve a little Lux in the last rinsing water to leave the woolens soft and fluffy. Put through a loose wringer, or squeeze the water out—do not wring. Dry in the shade. COLORED WOOLENS: Wash as above but in lukewarm suds and do not soak. Dry in the shade.

THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN DEMOCRACY AND AUTOCRACY—In the frieze above are the kaiser and his six sons, all of them members of the military caste which sends other men to death in battle but which keeps at a safe distance from the front itself. All of the kaiser's sons have high military commands in theory, but none of them is ever close enough to the front to be in actual danger. The crown prince, a notoriously erratic and irresponsible military officer, is given credit for generalship which is actually the work of other commanders. Col. Theodore Roosevelt's sons, who fight for principle and not for love of conquest, are, on the other hand, in the very thick of fighting. Quentin, pictured here, was killed in an aeroplane duel on July 14. Capt. Archibald is in a hospital in France with a broken and paralyzed arm and with a leg badly wounded by shrapnel. Maj. Theodore Jr. was recently reported wounded, and Kermit, who has been serving with the British forces in Mesopotamia and has been decorated for gallantry in action, recently left the British forces to become an officer in the American artillery in France. Luscious, New Sandwiches

—Make Them Now with Delicious

Sandwichola

Now comes Sandwichola, a new delight to those who go on picnics; week-end motor trips; carry their lunch to business; or eat light noon-day meals at home.

For it provides a new sandwich of delicious flavor and a food of high nutrition.

But the best of it is, it offers a captivating change from the cheese, ham, and other meats that now jade the palate.

It is economical also. For it costs less than meat. And it saves butter, because it takes butter's place.

Try it today if you want "something new." See how good it is.

You'll never forget these luscious sandwiches if you have them once.

Rare, Nutritious Foods

Sandwichola is an exquisite combination of ripe olives, tuna fish, pimientos and fine herbs put up in olive oil.

All are rare foods, rich in food value, and of unusual piquancy in flavor.

It is different, alluring. You will say it is unique. And you'll like it better than anything else you have ever tasted in a sandwich.

Other Uses

Try this new food as a salad also. Serve on lettuce with French dressing or mayonnaise.

You will use it often if you taste it once, as a relish with cold meats.

Mix it with cereals or meat and have delicious new croquettes.

It makes an appetizing canape with lemon and paprika.

The Food Administration in its "War Cook Book" urges garnishes and relishes. So, even as a relish alone, Sandwichola would have a value in war time.

A California Product

All the foods in Sandwichola are produced "next door" to our kitchens. And those kitchens are beside the Pacific Ocean, in view of snow-capped mountains.

The finest California ripe olives, pimientos, etc., come from nearby valleys, famous for their vegetables and fruit.

The tuna is fresh-caught in the sea and brought in by our fishing boats.

The tang and flavor and freshness of Sandwichola distinguish it from any other food you know.

15c—Get the First Jar Now

Let the whole family have Sandwichola. It costs but 15 cents a jar.

Take it on picnics. Serve with the regular meals in the several ways suggested. Note the zest and the new appreciation with which it is accepted.

Serve these new wheatless sandwiches in Red Cross Lunch Rooms. See how popular they are.

Get your first jar today. Learn what the hundreds of thousands know who are already its devotees.

Use the jars later for jellies, etc.

Manitou—the Drink That Cools Summer-Time

Manitou Sparkling Spring Water is plain-bottled, diamond-clear spring-water purity, live with exploding water bubblets that chase thirst. Every mouthful froths and foams and gushes coldness. Drink it largely—it's healthy as air. Ask for it in cafe, club, or restaurant. Order it home by the case.

Manitou—Nature's Sole Sparkle-Water

Manitou Sparkling Spring Water is pure, Coloradan deep-spring water carbonated by nature in the mountain depths. Manitou is the only nature-carbonated water sold in America. It is piped from the spring to your cool, green bottle.

At the soda fountain ask for a Manitou lemonade or a Manitou grape-juice highball.

Leading druggists and grocers will deliver Manitou to your home.

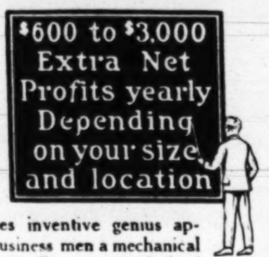
How Live Stores Beat Rising Cost of Goods

Making 5 Sq. Ft. of Waste Floor Space Pay the Rent

LARGE numbers of storekeepers, restaurant men and film exhibitors have solved the problem of making more money in spite of today's narrow margin of profits, high expense and the shortage of many goods.

And all they did was put in a Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine—as you can do for a small deposit. Many soon pay the balance out of Butter-Kist sales.



W. O. Hopkins of Indiana made 49,015 sales of Butter-Kist Pop Corn in 12 months by actual count, and the sales of another department increased 99½ per cent as a result of it. Not in all retail history does inventive genius appear to have given business men a mechanical aid that brings such profits, new trade and bigger crowds.

Even in towns of 300 and 400 inhabitants the Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine is earning $2 to $10 a day from five square feet of floor space in drug stores, picture theatres, variety stores, groceries, cigar stores, confectioneries, department stores, lunch rooms, florist shops, billiard halls, commissaries, parks, camps, resorts, fairs, etc.

Requires no extra help, no heavy stock investment; stands anywhere, beautifies surroundings. Motion draws crowds. Coaxing fragrance makes people eager to buy. Exclusive toasty flavor of fluffy white Butter-Kist Pop Corn brings them back for more.

Pop Corn contains no wheat or sugar—more popular today than ever. This year a bumper crop is being grown to meet the enormous demand.

What Retailers Say:

"It's the greatest little money getter I ever found. From Aug. 1 to Sept. 1, my clear profit was $92, and Butter-Kist sells even better in cold weather."—J. J. Lowther, W. Va.; City of 325 inhabitants.

"Have been operating Butter-Kist Pop Corn Machine nearly two years and am more than satisfied. Paid for machine out of profits in less than a year."—J. H. Jericho & Co., Rexall Druggist, Iowa; City of 4,902 inhabitants.

"Net profit average about $150 a month."—Barris Bros., Confectioners, Ind.; City of 7,854.

"Have averaged nearly $10 per day clear for three months."—John Lorge, Druggist, Pa.; City of 20,702.

Why have your dresses ruined by perspiration?

YOU can be as sweet and dainty hours after your bath as when you stepped so clean and rosy into your fresh clothes! Sweet and dainty—even if you dance or hurry—even on the busiest summer day!

Odorono—a toilet water formulated by a physician—will bring you complete relief from all perspiration annoyances. Use it two or three times a week and you will perspire evenly and healthily on all parts of the body instead of profusely and unnaturally where your clothing prevents normal evaporation.

At all toilet counters in the United States and Canada, 60c and $1.00. Trial size, 30c. By mail, postpaid, if your dealer hasn't it. Address The Odorono Co., 1107 Blair Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Write for our booklet, "The Appealing Charm of Daintiness" to know more about perspiration and how to relieve it. Suggest to the men of your family that they write for "The Assurance of Perfect Grooming."

Dr. Allyn Endorses Odorono

"We do not believe that any harm can come from stopping the excretion of perspiration in limited areas such as under the arms, feet, forehead, etc.

"Experimental and practical tests show that Odorono is harmless, economical and effective when employed as directed and will injure neither the skin nor the health."

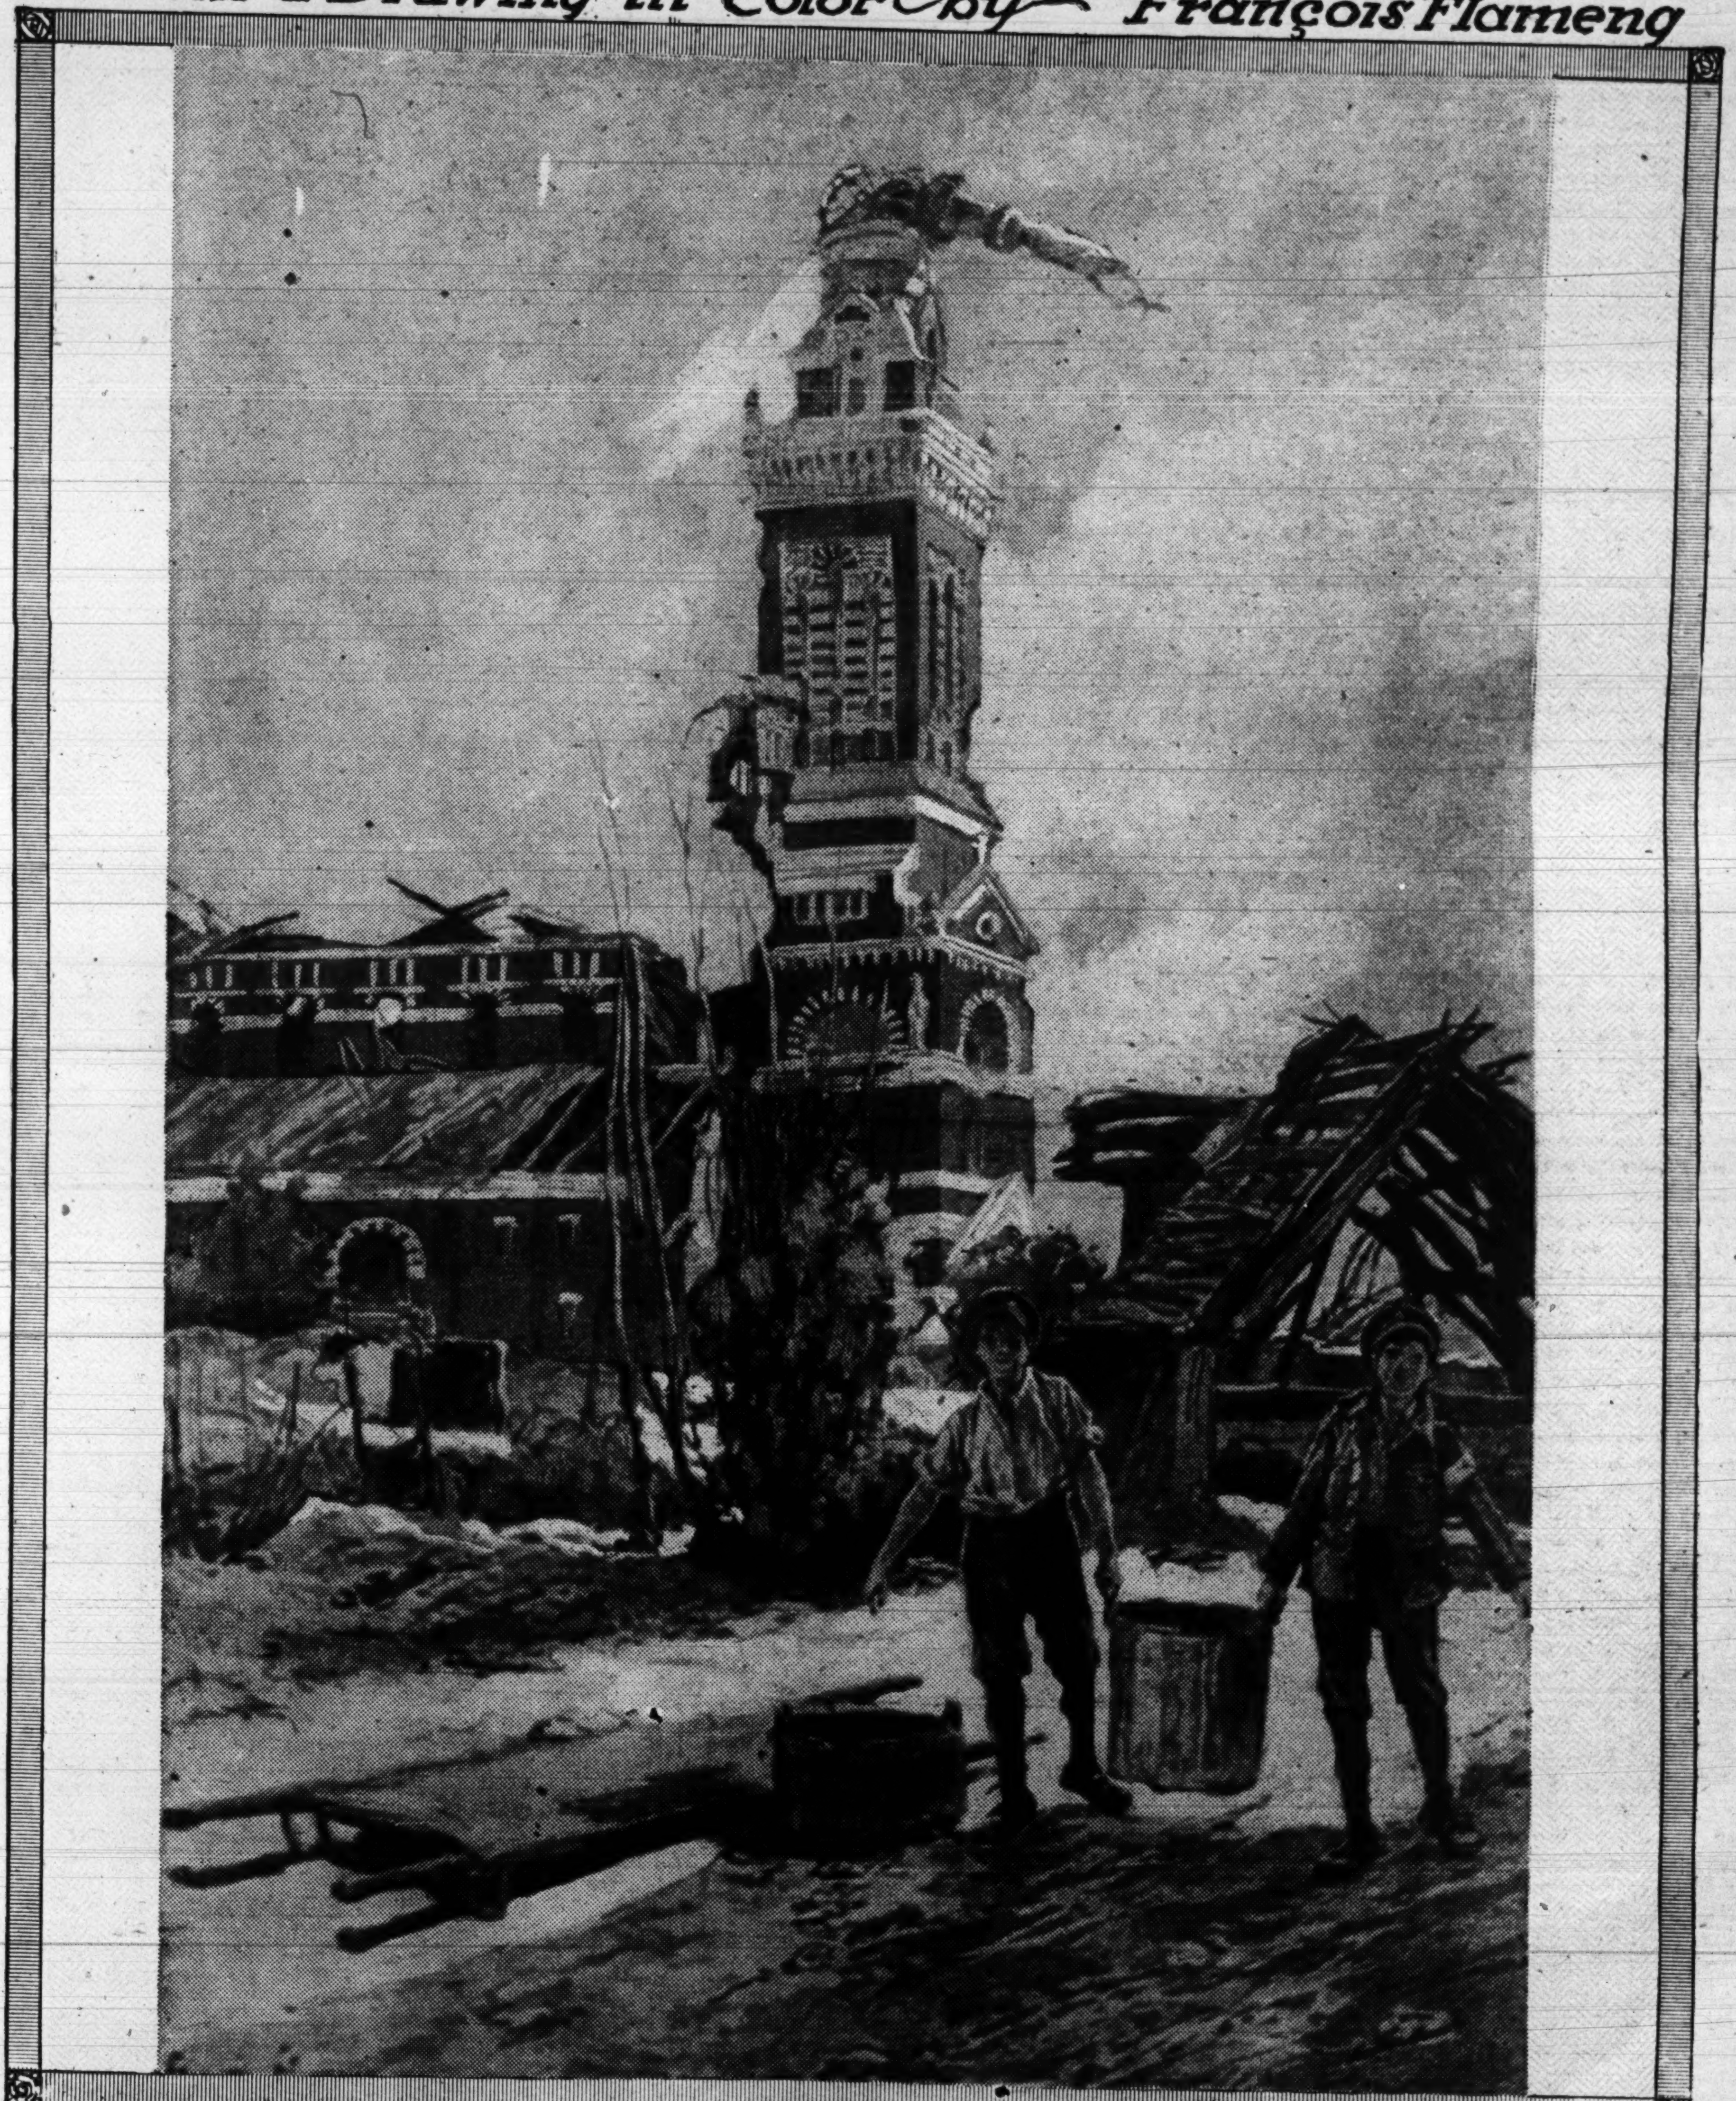
"The CHURCH AT ALBERT"
From a Drawing in Color by François Flameng



BY ELEANOR JEWETT.

TWENTY-EIGHT miles northeast of Amiens is the little town of Albert. Rarely heard of before the war, it is now one of the many places hallowed by the blood of the British in their defense of the Somme front. Over the gabled roofs of the town towered the red and white facade of the cathedral, rising to highest eminence in the pinnacle which was crowned with a gold statue of the Virgin and Child.

During the bitterest of the German bombardment a shell struck the statue and it stood for something more than a year at the angle shown in the painting. While it was in this position a superstition arose among the French troops. "When the Virgin falls," they said, "the war will go badly with us." But since then the statue has fallen, struck down in ruins by enemy shells, and still the good fortune of "Our Lady of Sorrows" stands by the poilus, yielding not a pace to the advances of the German Gott.

The painting is made from a drawing in color by Francois Flameng, one of the most famous painters and engravers in France today. He was born in Paris in the nineteenth century. His father was a noted engraver, Leopold Flameng. The boy studied first under him, and the sculptor-painter Constantin Meunier. Later he worked under the guidance of Cahanel, Medouin, and J. P. Laurens.

War is not an unknown factor in Flameng's life. He was 14 when the Prussians stormed Paris in 1870. The German shells made ruin of the school where he and his boy friends studied. So, the next morning, these boys of 14 and 15 went to the mayor and enrolled in the ambulance corps, working like grown men through that bitter siege. In 1871 Flameng went to Brussels with his father. Later they returned to Paris and there he made great progress in his chosen profession. Now, as a painter of murals and of historical scenes, he is famous throughout France.

He is a painter loved by the people. Since 1873 he has been represented at the salon. Many prizes and medals have been awarded him. He is an officer of the Legion of Honor, member of the institute, professor of the school of the Beaux-Arts, and a member of the committee of French artists.

Among his paintings are "Un Lutri," "L'Appel des Girondins," "Napoleon at Waterloo," "and "Murat Charging at the Head of the French Cavalry." The spirited frescoes in the Opera-Comique are from his hand.

THE TEENIE WEENIES

IT WAS A HOT DAY BUT THE LITTLE FOLKS KNEW HOW TO KEEP COOL. BY WM. DONAHEY.

ALTHOUGH the Tennie Weenie tents were pitched in the heart of the woods, with moss covered stones and running spring water nearby, even that well shaded spot was hot. It had been hot for the last two days, and the little folks spent their time lying on the moss and drnking often of the cold water.

"J-j-j-jimminie fishooks!" panted the Dunce, who sat fanning himself with the leaf of a tiny weed, "I've got an idea."

"Well, you certainly have a lot of energy to have an idea this kind of weather," laughed the Lady of Fashion.

"Let's go swimming!" shouted the Dunce. "That's my idea."

"I call that a rattling good notion, that's what I do," said Paddy Pinn, jumping up from the ground where he had been lying. "And I move that we get into our bathing suits and go over to the place where the water falls over the big rock."

Most of the Teenie Weenies made a dive into their tiny tents and soon appeared in many colored bathing suits.

"Come on," shouted the Dunce, and off he ran, jumping over weeds and pebbles towards the water fall near the little camp.

As none of the Teenie Weenies had been in the pool where they had chosen to swim, it was quite necessary to explore the water for hidden rocks and to make sure it was deep enough to dive. Several of the little men who were strong swimmers carefully explored the pool and found it very deep—in fact, so deep that it was quite impossible to touch the bottom at certain places.

The spot was an ideal swimming place, for it was well shaded with ferns and white violets and it was surrounded by high, moss covered stones, which made it fine for diving. The Old Soldier and the Doctor made a springing board, which gave the little folks a great deal of pleasure, but most of the men spent their time diving off the high rock, trying to touch the bottom. Although they dived many times, and even held big stones in their hands to help carry them down, they were unable to touch the bottom.

One thing which made a lot of fun for the Teenie Weenies was a discovery of the Clown's. The little chap crawled up on one of of high stones and, catching the end of a fern leaf, he swung out over the water and dropped off with a great splash into the deepest hole. This became so popular the little people had to stand in line waiting their turn, and they kept it up until they were so tired they could scarcely hold on to the stem of the fern.

It was almost dark before the Teenie Weenies reached their camp, and they were all very tired and hungry, but every one was made happy when the Cook set a thimble full of rice pudding and three cold baked lima beans before them.

(Author's note—The hole in which the Teenie Weenies had been diving and could not touch bottom was afterwards measured with a foot rule and proved to be nine and one-half inches deep, or nearly thirty-eight Teenie Weenie feet deep in the little people's measurement.)

"The CHURCH AT ALBERT"

BY ELEANOR JEWETT.

TWENTY-EIGHT miles northeast of Amiens is the little town of Albert. Rarely heard of before the war, it is now one of the many places hallowed by the blood of the British in their defense of the Somme front. Over the gabled roofs of the town towered the red and white facade of the cathedral, rising to highest eminence in the pinnacle which was crowned with a gold statue of the Virgin and Child.

During the bitterest of the German bombardment a shell struck the statue and it stood for something more than a year at the angle shown in the painting. While it was in this position a superstition arose among the French troops. "When the Virgin falls," they said, "the war will go badly with us." But since then the statue has fallen, struck down in ruins by enemy shells, and still the good fortune of "Our Lady of Sorrows" stands by the poilus, yielding not a pace to the advances of the German Gott.

The painting is made from a drawing in color by Francois Flameng, one of the most famous painters and engravers in France today. He was born in Paris in the nineteenth century. His father was a noted engraver, Leopold Flameng. The boy studied first under him, and the sculptor-painter Constantin Meunier. Later he worked under the guidance of Cahanel, Medouin, and J. P. Laurens.

War is not an unknown factor in Flameng's life. He was 14 when the Prussians stormed Paris in 1870. The German shells made ruin of the school where he and his boy friends studied. So, the next morning, these boys of 14 and 15 went to the mayor and enrolled in the ambulance corps, working like grown men through that bitter siege. In 1871 Flameng went to Brussels with his father. Later they returned to Paris and there he made great progress in his chosen profession. Now, as a painter of murals and of historical scenes, he is famous throughout France.

He is a painter loved by the people. Since 1873 he has been represented at the salon. Many prizes and medals have been awarded him. He is an officer of the Legion of Honor, member of the institute, professor of the school of the Beaux-Arts, and a member of the committee of French artists.

Among his paintings are "Un Lutri," "L'Appel des Girondins," "Napoleon at Waterloo," "and "Murat Charging at the Head of the French Cavalry." The spirited frescoes in the Opera-Comique are from his hand.

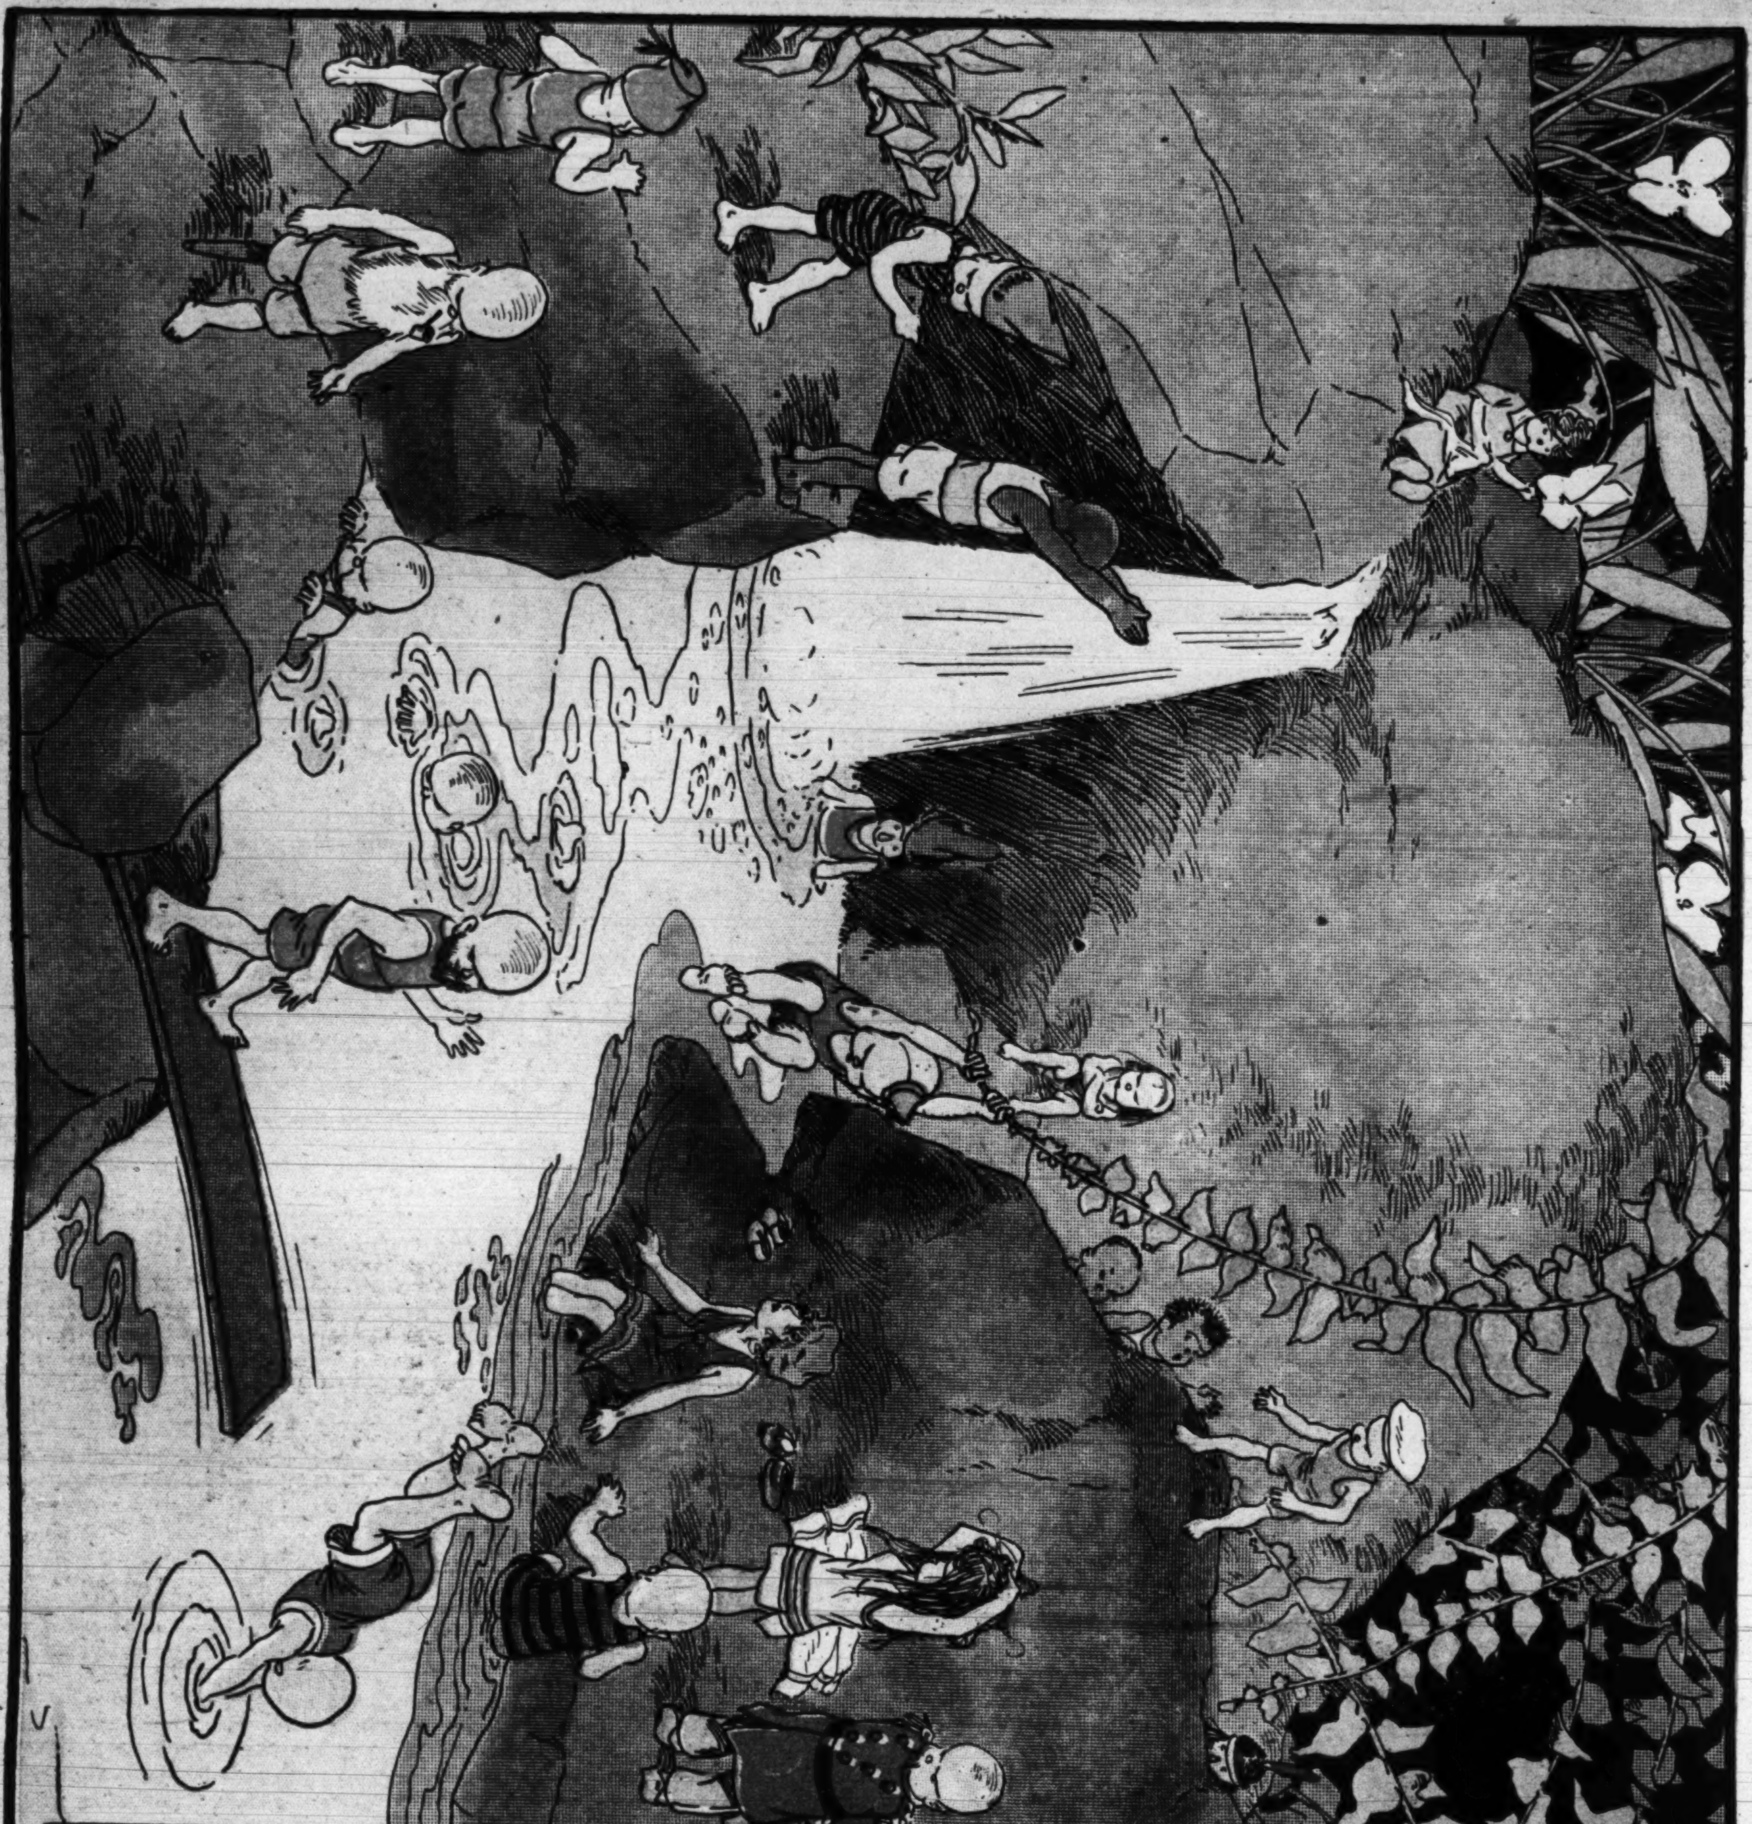
THE TEENIE WEENIES
IT WAS A HOT DAY BUT THE LITTLE FOLKS KNEW HOW TO KEEP COOL. BY WM. DONAHEY.



ALTHOUGH the Tennie Weenie tents were pitched in the heart of the woods, with moss covered stones and running spring water nearby, even that well shaded spot was hot. It had been hot for the last two days, and the little folks spent their time lying on the moss and drinking often of the cold water.

"J-j-j-jimminie fishooks!" panted the Dunce, who sat fanning himself with the leaf of a tiny weed, "I've got an idea."

"Well, you certainly have a lot of energy to have an idea this kind of weather," laughed the Lady of Fashion.

"Let's go swimming!" shouted the Dunce. "That's my idea."

"I call that a rattling good notion, that's what I do," said Paddy Pinn, jumping up from the ground where he had been lying. "And I move that we get into our bathing suits and go over to the place where the water falls over the big rock."

Most of the Teenie Weenies made a dive into their tiny tents and soon appeared in many colored bathing suits.

"Come on," shouted the Dunce, and off he ran, jumping over weeds and pebbles towards the water fall near the little camp.

As none of the Teenie Weenies had been in the pool where they had chosen to swim, it was quite necessary to explore the water for hidden rocks and to make sure it was deep enough to dive. Several of the little men who were strong swimmers carefully explored the pool and found it very deep—in fact, so deep that it was quite impossible to touch the bottom at certain places.

The spot was an ideal swimming place, for it was well shaded with ferns and white violets and it was surrounded by high, moss covered stones, which made it fine for diving. The Old Soldier and the Doctor made a springing board, which gave the little folks a great deal of pleasure, but most of the men spent their time diving off the high rock, trying to touch the bottom. Although they dived many times, and even held big stones in their hands to help carry them down, they were unable to touch the bottom.

One thing which made a lot of fun for the Teenie Weenies was a discovery of the Clown's. The little chap crawled up on one of of high stones and, catching the end of a fern leaf, he swung out over the water and dropped off with a great splash into the deepest hole. This became so popular the little people had to stand in line waiting their turn, and they kept it up until they were so tired they could scarcely hold on to the stem of the fern.

It was almost dark before the Teenie Weenies reached their camp, and they were all very tired and hungry, but every one was made happy when the Cook set a thimble full of rice pudding and three cold baked lima beans before them.

(Author's note—The hole in which the Teenie Weenies had been diving and could not touch bottom was afterwards measured with a foot rule and proved to be nine and one-half inches deep, or nearly thirty-eight Teenie Weenie feet deep in the little people's measurement.)

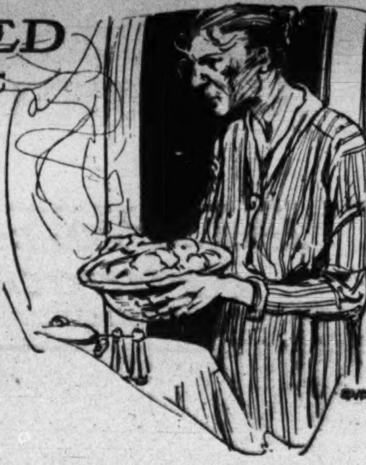
SHE PROMISED

by Jack Lait



So Did He; But Only One of Them Kept the Promise.

IT was my old friend, Pickled Pete, the retired and retiring hobo, spinner of tales when he was in the mood, who harked back to the days when he had been a harvest hand in the great wheat fields of Alberta, the same being a section in Canada.

"Seems to me I've chinned to you about the ice 'bo, an' also the yegg. Them is manifestuations o' hobo existence which differs very largely f'm the characteristics o' the wheat 'bo, which is sometimes the savior o' the nation, an' then, again, is sometimes the lowest form o' human life, to be treated with contemp' by the rubes an' with hostyle indiff'rence by the met'opolitan millions what eats the pies made outta the grains what he cuts by the sweat o' his low brow.

"The wheat 'bo is only such in the harvestin' season. The rest o' the year he loafs like a gent, bein' like the p'fessional baseball player, whose season is brief an' intensive, or like the vaud'ville ham, who plays on'y in the cool months, an' then on'y if he's lucky.

"Wheat 'bos is mos'ly farmers' sons what quit the ol' homesteads becus it was work or fight an' they got tired o' fightin'. A lot o' stories has been wrote about sons o' the soil who ventures forth as soon as they're big enough to lick their ol' man, an' wanders into the larger worl' past the barb wire borders o' their ancestral acres. They're gen'rally a adventurous lot, bein' the pick in that line, as against the other an' unwrote sons o' farmers who stick to their home p'serves like a cat, come what might, an' in time inherit patches o' pasture an' field, an' settle down to have sons o' their own to annoy wit' chores an' socially ruin wit' backwoods environments.

"The wheat 'bo isn' averse to work, on'y he's averse to workin' very steady. He don' objec' to toilin' say six week a year or so. I think congressmen is got the same notion about that.

"Well, Salvation Sol, who was a wheat 'bo o' parts, and had been one in many parts, was that sort. He'd book out for the hard season f'm a Chicago labor agency, never gettin' col' feet when it come time for him to report, but showin' up like the honor men what you reads about, what comes up to scratch even though they could escape.

"In them six weeks when he labored he took down about a couple o' hund'ed bucks, an' that sustained him durin' the remainder o' the year, he lettin' out his bank roll on a system—so much for red-eye, so much for chewin', so much for chow—so's it'd last him till it was time again to p'esent his beamin' mush at the counter o' the shippin' agent, ready to be cattle-carred to Montana or Ioway or anywheres.

"Well, this partic'lar year Sol an' me was in a gang what was herded out for a li'l exe'cise in aroun' Moose Jaw, which is a town o' some thirty thousan' on the Canadian Pacific betwixt Minneapolis, Calgary, an' nowheres. I hadn' never been there before, but Sol was entirely conversant wit' the location, havin' did a couple o' years there in his earlier manhood. Moose Jaw is a pen'ten-t'ry town, as ev'rybody knows, pen'tent'ry towns bein' alwus famous, like Joliet, San Quentin, Dannemora, Sing Sing, an' Waupun.

"Salvation Sol, bein' called that becus he got t'ree mont's off for acceptin' religion while a-servin' in the pen, had give the dominion a wide road since his release. Not that there was anythin' on him, he havin' expiated his sentence less credits for the slight matter o' sheep stealin', which had involved him in the meshes o' the law, but he alwus had it in his craw that Canada hadn' been as kind to him as it might o' been, an' for that reason he made a habit o' snubbin' our ally on the north. That didn' keep him f'm signin' the ticket to go to Alberta; his prejudices wasn' as set as that.

"Anyhow, in Moose Jaw we was met by a 'bo boss what cut us up into squads an' sent us off to diff'rent farms, me an' Sol ketchin' the same one, a quarter section out near a village called Chaplin—no, not after the funny feller, long before him. We was drove out an' we got there pretty tol'ably late in the night, bein' showed with a lantern to where we was to sleep, on the secon' tier o' bunks in a big hay barn.

"We was good an' tired, an' we slep' the repose o' the weary 'bo what re'lizes his long vacation is over an' ere the morrer's sun lights up the horizont he's gotta begin a long stretch o' tough an' torturin' toil. When we ariz we made our toilet, which was did by runnin' our finger t'rough our hair an' yawnin' sev'ral vig'rous times, an' we breezed over to the house to get our breakfasses.

"We walks in an' sits down wit' some other han's, an' starts tearin' into the thick slices o' bread. We hears an' smells the bacon gettin' ready, an' mighty soon in comes a woman, dressed in a long, blue calicker wrapper, carrying a plate o' fine, fat, broiled chunks. She reaches over my shoulder an' she sets it down—an' as she does, she sees Sol an' Sol sees her.

"The woman jumps back like she discovered all of a sudden the plate was red hot. Sol pulls back like he's gonna go t'rough the chair. Then they bot' holds each other by the eye a minnit, an' she turns, slow, an' starts back for the stove, which was in a kind o' outkitchen, jus' beyon' the door.

"She brings in the coffee a li'l while later, but she keeps here face towards the floor, an' Sol, too, don't try to hook glances wit' her.

"Pretty soon we goes out to our work. Sol hacks away, silent, wit' a deep an' far off look on his fuzzy feachers, till noon, when the horn sounds for dinner. I starts. Sol walks over an' sits down. I ast him ain't he a-comin' in to eat, an' he says no, he ain't hungry, which is the on'y time I ever hear that sentiment expressed by a 'bo what's put in a good half day cuttin' wheat. I starts to go an' he calls after me that if I'd bring him a couple o' slices o' bread, mebbe he'd eat 'em after—mebbe his appetite might come back to him. I knew then that it wasn' becus he didn' wanna eat that he was a-stayin' behin', an' I said all right.

"When the woman comes in wit' a mess o' meat an' p'taters she looks kind o' like she's half afraid to the chair where Sol was s'posed to squat, then looks up puzzled when she sees it's em'ty. I took a couple o' good slants at her durin' while she's a-servin' dinner, feelin' that she was the reason for Sol not comin' in to ruin his share o' food, a mos' remarkable circumstance.

"She looked 50, but, havin' seen her kind o' women before, I knew she wasn' more'n about mebbe 30. Ranch women ages awful young—it's a mean grind, livin' off like that, up f'm sunrise to midnight wit' cookin' an' dishwashin' for a crew o' 'bos in the season, milkin' an' sewin' an' bearin' kids an' doin' a lot o' odd jobs besides, all the time.

"She might oncet o' been a spankin' pretty gal. Her eyes was still blue, but they was faded an' dullish. Her figger, which might o' been plump an' curvey in her youth, was all shot till that wrapper hung like it didn' have no more in it than jus' enough to keep it f'm a-fallin' off. Her han's was warped an' wrinkled an' red. Her neck was seamy an' scrawny.

"There was enough bread on the platter for the seven o' us, a-countin' Sol, if he'd o' come along, but it was all gobbled by the survivin' six, which you'll believe if you know 'bos at all. So, when we finished an' got up I didn' have no lunch to take out to Sol, an' I had to go to the li'l kitchen after some. I asks the woman can I have a couple o' slices o' bread, an' she kind o' hangs her head an' asks is it for Sol, callin' him by name. I says yes. She gets right busy an' she t'rows some meat an' bread an' other truck t'gether on a plate, wraps it over wit' a napkin, an' han's it to me to take out to him. I guess, now I think back on it, that she prob'bly give up her own dinner, becus I can't remember seein' anything left after she scrapes up what she heaped on that plate. Anyway, I hikes out to Sol wit' it, an' I tells him she sent it, an' that I knew she knew him, becus she'd spoke his name.

"'Gee,' says Sol, 'that's awful fine o' Jenny, a-fixin' up a gob o' swell grub like this here for a ol' bum like me, hyh? She alwus was a fine woman, Jenny was. But how she's changed—you wouldn' hardly know her for the same girl, would you?' I said I couldn' hardly, havin' never seen her before. An' Sol ketches himself, an' says, 'Of course—what am I a-ravin' about?' He eats the truck on the plate an' goes back to work.

"That night, when it come time to knock off an' go in for supper, Sol stan's back, thinkin' an' puzzlin'. I walks over an' I asts him what isl it—what's wrong—an' he says he hates to go in—he hates to go in. I asts him is they anything between him an' this woman that he's gotta dodge her like that—if they was, well she didn' seem to hol' no hard feelin's, by the way she dug up that feed for him at noon. He looks at me, mad at firs', then begins to laugh.

"'No,' says Sol, 'they ain' no more reason why I can't face her than what there is why I can't face you or anybody else. When I finished my bit in Moose Jaw I was clean wit' the worl', an' I been that way ever since. I'll face any man, woman, or child, anywheres, an', when the time comes, I'm ready to face my Maker.' I says then why hang back, an' he goes like to answer me, then he smiles an' says I wouldn' understan'. An' he pulls up his shoulders an' starts for the house, me a-swingin' along.

"When Jenny comes in this time wit' the col' pork an' hot beans an' slum Sol turns firs' red, then white. He slants a shy, scared kind o' look at her, then he drops his peepers an' he don't look up the rest o' the meal at all, hurries t'rough, an' stalks out into the barn before any o' the rest of us is done. When I come out after a while him an' me sits down an' kills a couple o' pipefuls before we turn in, an' we talk about a lot o' things, but not a word about Jenny.

"We turn in then, an' I fall asleep pretty soon. When I come to in the mornin' Sol is gone. Nobody knows when or where he went. He don' turn up all day, or the nex' day. So a extry 'bo is sent for, an' Salvation Sol is forgot by ev'rybody aroun' there excep' me—an' Jenny.

"She didn' have much to do wit' the han's outside o' bringin' in their meals, at which times she never said a word to nobody, but I caught her a few times like she wanted to say somethin' to me. She never got to it for weeks, but I could feel she had somethin' on her tongue for my hearin', an' I knew it mus' be about Sol, becus they wasn' no subjec' other than that what she'd have any business wit' me about.

"It was the day before I was gonna blow back for the States an' for the sof' flop where I spends my winters, when she offices me to come in the li'l kitchen as I was a-leavin' after one o' the meals. I walk in an' she asts me, awful shy an' clumsy-like, did I think I'd see Sol when I got back to the city. I says I guess so, if he ain' dead, or if he ain' switched his habits o' many years, many years durin' which we been side-kickers an' cronies in the same dump in Chicago, eatin' an' drinkin' and smokin' t'gether for mont's at a time.

"She says she guessed I'd meet him, all right, an' would I please say to him that Jenny knew why he wouldn' look at her when he was up there, why he beat it away.

"'You tell him,' says she, 'that I know why it was, an' it was my fault, though I couldn' hardly help it. Tell him I guess he kep' his promise to me, an' that I'm glad, awful glad; an' that I know I didn' keep my promise to him, an' I'm sorry—O, so sorry!'

"I waits for more, but that's all she says, so I tells her if I meet up wit' Sol I'll sure tell him what she tol' me, an' she hangs her head an' says she'll be much obliged. An' that was all o' that. Nex' day I vamps back wit' a couple o' centuries in a bag aroun' my neck, staked for the long, sweet season o' reposeful convalescence after my labors, an' I ain' never seen Jenny—or, for that matter, any part o' Canada—since."

"But Sol—you saw him again?" I asked.

"Sol? O, sure, I seen him again," said Pete, who is a shrewd dog on dramatic values, and who knew as well as I knew that I wanted to hear more of this, that I wanted to be let in on the mysterious mutual promises between Salvation Sol and Jenny which had led to the circumstances he had detailed.

"Sure—I seen Sol at the lodgin' house, same as ev'ry year. He'd gone back to Chi an' farmed out somewheres in Nebrasky, losin' about a week or so, but still fixed up O. K. for the period o' rest," said Pete.

"He come in about two days after I did. He didn' ask me nothin' about Jenny, an' I wouldn' o' never mentioned it if it hadn' o' been that I'd been give a message from her to him. It ain' my habit to press people for confident'l stories about their own past lives, that bein' mebbe one point o' politeness in which a hobo is got it on a newspaper man—no insult intended.

"But I had the words f'm her own lips to carry to his ear.

"I'll admit I'd been wond'rin' some. What promise could she o' made to him—not to say when an' where could she o' made it—that'd cause him to behave so heart-broke, an' her so ashamed, an' him to blow away like he done, I kep' astin' myself all the way back to town an' until he come in. Well, it wasn' none o' my mess. All I had to do was tell him what I was tol' to tell him. But I kep' wond'rin' was it some love affair? It must o' been. That's about all men and women promises each other about, ain' it? Had she promised to be true to him, an' had she married this close-fisted Canuck what owned a hun'rd an' forty fine acres an' made her do her own slavin', instead? If so, what had Sol promised her that she knew he was a-keepin', like she said?

"I oouldn' figger it out none. But I calls Sol over in a corner an' I says, 'Jenny give me a few words to tell you.' He got excited for a minnit, then he walks away an' he says he don' wanna hear what she had to say. But I follers him up an' says I give her my word I'd hand him her message an' was gonna do it if I had to strap him down and pour it in his ear t'rough a funnel

"He stan's quiet, then, while I says what she said. He shakes his head an' he kind o' smiles some. Then he sits me down an' he tells me:

"'When I was a-doin' my time at Moose Jaw,' says Sol, 'Jenny lived in the town. She was on'y a young girl then, jus' over f'm Scotland a year or so, an' she was the pretties' thing what ever a man, jailbird or gent, laid a glimmer on.

"'They wasn' a convic' in that stir what wouldn' o' tore out one o' his eyes for her. She useta put in her time a-goin' aroun' in front o' the cells, talkin' to the boys about religion an' bein' straight an' upright.

"'She had me wound aroun' her li'l finger, an' she useta sit outside my grilled door for hours a-readin' to me out o' the Bible. I was a tough egg when I was shoved in there, an' I didn' never have no much use for Bibles—until then—but I started in by lettin' her read becus that kep' her near, where I could look at her an' listen at her.

"'I begin, pretty soon,, to get thinkin' about what she read to me, about bein' clean an' the c'mandments agin stealin' an' like that, an' one Sund'y mornin' I hits the trail in chapel an' fall on my knees an' is saved.

"'The warden gets me some time off for that. I didn' want it. I'd rurther o' stayed in a cell if Jenny was outside the door than sit here, takin' my ease an' my beer. But my papers come an' I'm turned out.

"'In the office, as I'm gettin' my citizen's clo's, Jenny comes in. She comes over an' she takes my flipper an' she says to me she wants me to promise her that I'll alwus be a God-fearin', law-abidin' man henceforth, that I'll work for my bread, an' worship the Lord, an' never break one o' the c'mandments again. Would I promise? I promised. I tol' her she'd made a new man outta me an' she need never worry that I'd ever again do a injury to any fellow bein'. An', Pete, I've kep' my promise.'

"He turns away his head, an' he says nothin' about what she promised him, the promise she tol' me she didn' keep. I admit I was a-burnin' up to know. But I didn' press him.

"Pretty quick he turns an' looks at me, sheepish an' bashful I'd call it, an' he goes on:

"'Before I lets go her hand I says to her I want her to promise me somethin' too, an' she looks s'prised an' asts what is it. I says I hoped she wouldn' think I was tryin' to get fresh or nothin', me bein' on'y a ex-con an' her a lady an' a relation o' the warden's, but I did wanna ax her one thing for me an' for humanity. She says go on, what was it?

"'I asks her to promise me—to—I asts her to promise me that she'd alwus be beautiful like she was jus' then—alwus. An' she promised me, Pete. An' you seen how she kep' her promise!'"

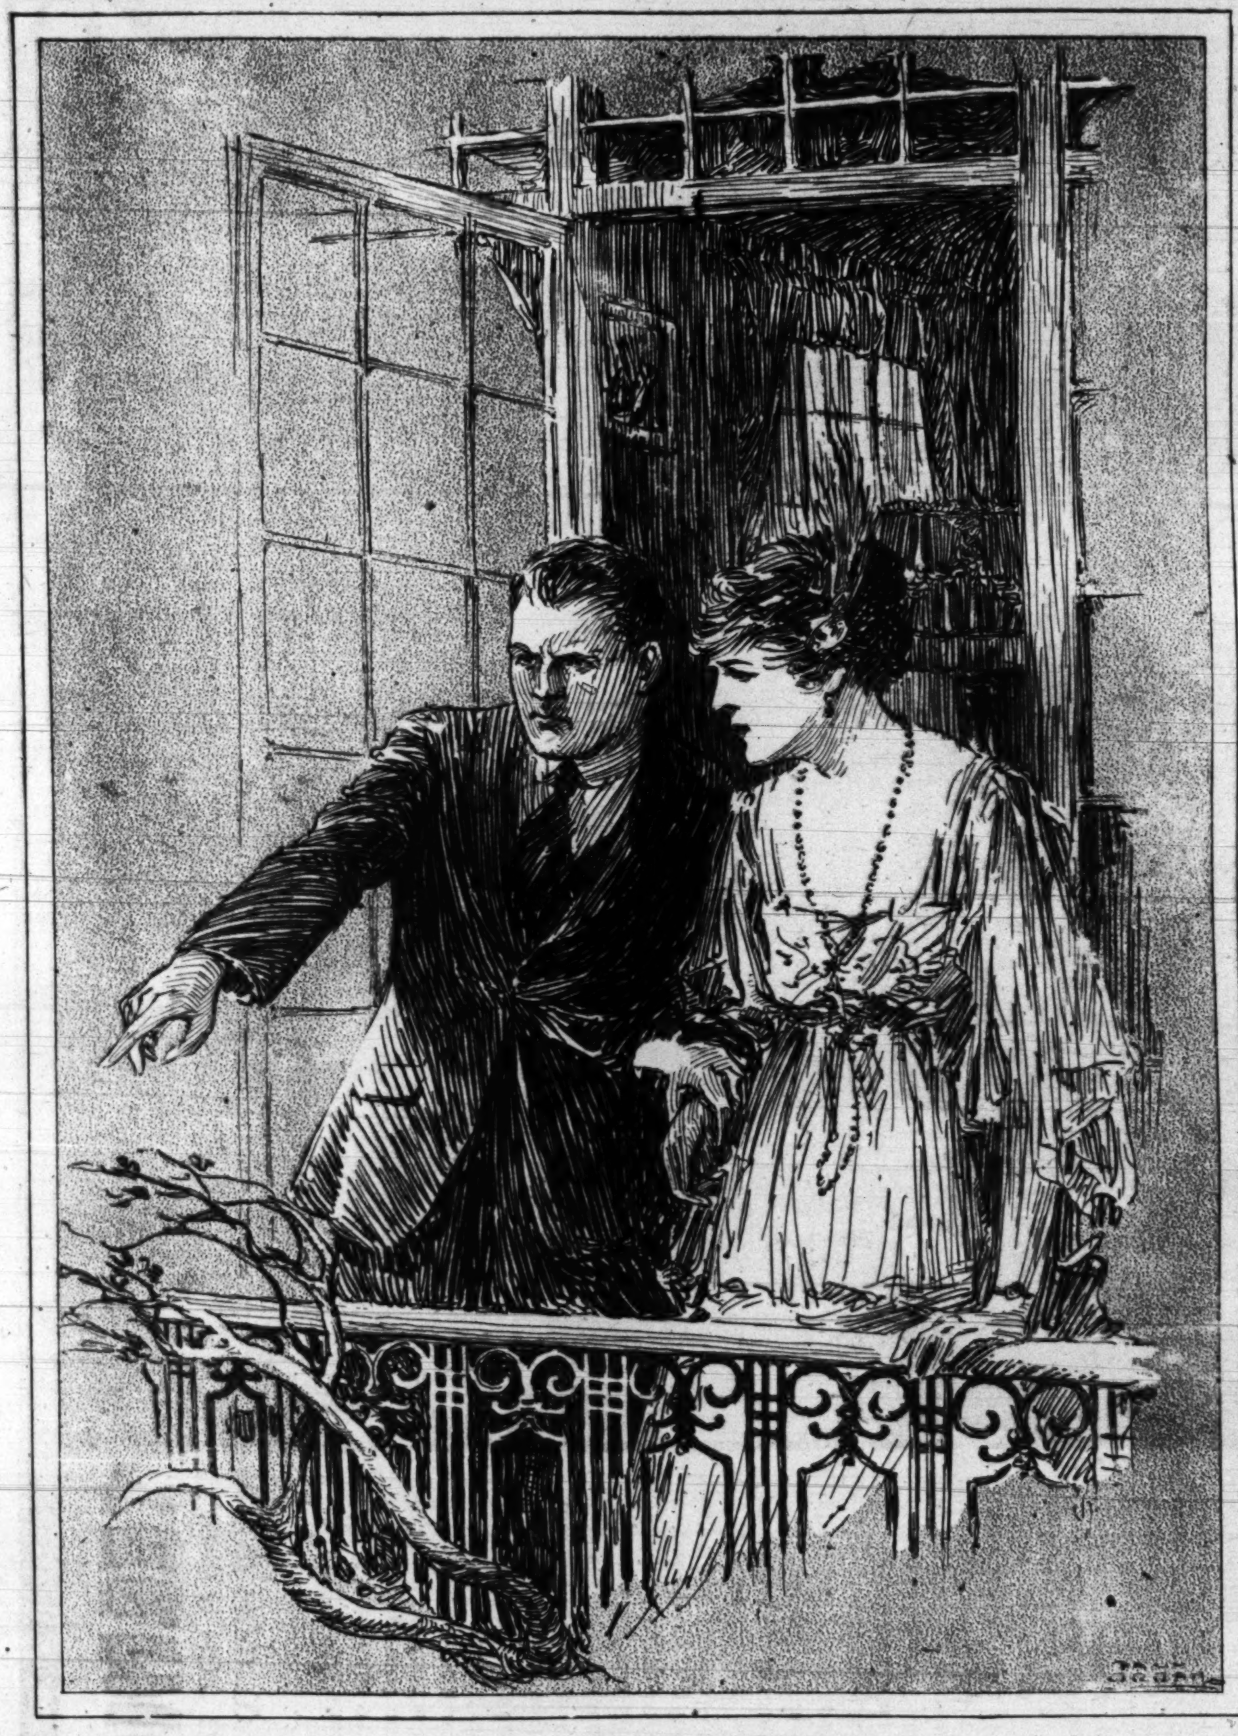
by Fred M. White



"There are over five hundred devils there," Manning said——.

night's work. And if I had not heard of this and hastened to the spot he would have succeeded. At any rate, he has paid the price. I saw to that."

"You killed him?" Edith cried.

"I shot him, certainly. On my side, at any rate, it was a fair fight. But what does it matter? Why go into all that? It is the future we have to think of."

Edith Carson bent her head in shame. She remembered now the warnings that Manning had given her, and how she had flouted them. The spoiled child of a rich American father, she had traveled the world as she pleased, making friends here and there, and living her own self-centered life until Manning had drifted across her horizon. Perhaps if his admiration had been a little less manifest, if he had not wooed her quite so humbly, she might have given him her heart long ago. And because he had followed her half across the world it had been her mood to treat him with a certain good-humored contempt. But that was not her feeling now.

She turned to him suddenly, with a look in her eyes that a little while before would have filled him with gladness. "I am responsible for all this," she said. "How foolish I have been, how blind! And yet I meant nothing. Now, tell me the truth—tell me, are we standing here face to face with death? I am not without courage, Tom. I shall dread things a lot less if I really know."

"Well, then, we are," Manning said. "We can't go back, and I don't know the way forward. It's only a mile or two, if I knew the right direction, but it might be a continent as far as we are concerned. And I am afraid to leave this clearing. There are all sorts of dangers around us—snakes and wild beasts, and all that kind of thing. We have enough food for two days, with care, and I have my gun. Good heavens, how helpless a man is at times like this!"

They made more than one attempt to find an avenue of safety down those tangled green lanes, but each evening, before dusk fell, they were forced back again into the opening, where they sat, sharing the rapidly decreasing stocks of provisions, augmented from time to time by Manning with his gun. They kept up a good fire, there in the heart of the forest; and long after Edith had fallen asleep, to dream fitful dreams, Manning sat moodily looking into the gloom beyond the ring of the firelight, and catching the amber glow in more than one pair of restless, savage eyes.

And so it went on, until there was barely enough food left for another day or so, and Manning was down to his last handful of cartridges. His clothes hung about him in rags, his face was grimy, and his chin black with a four days' growth of beard. And, in sooth, Edith Carson was in little better case. Manning had saved her as much as possible, but that filmy evening dress of hers was all in shreds, the diamonds—which she still wore in her dusky hair—looked grotesquely out of place. And so the fourth evening came, with Edith sleeping a few yards away, and Manning hunched up by the side of the fire, his empty pipe in his mouth and a look on his face that was not good to see. He was tired and worn out, and very near the breaking point with fatigue and anxiety. Presently he began to nod, and was drifting off subconsciously into the realm of dreams, when a voice struck on his ear.

It was a strange, hoarse voice, hardly human, a croaking, mocking sort of voice, from somewhere overhead, so that Manning opened his eyes with a sudden feeling that he was either dreaming or that he was on the verge of madness. He took a pull at himself and wiped the cold moisture from his forehead.

"I am going dotty!" he murmured. "I mustn't do that—I mustn't do that!

Then the voice came again, clearly enough this time, and Manning knew beyond question that he was listening to it, cold and trembling, but with all his senses about him.

"Have a drink! Have a drink!" the voice said from somewhere overhead. "Have a lemon and seltzer!"

Manning also laughed. A queer, hysterical feeling gripped him by the throat. Edith Carson sat up suddenly.

"Did you hear that?" she whispered. "Was it real?"

"It must be real if we both heard it," Manning said.

"I heard it last night," Edith went on. "Just the same words, only I thought I was dreaming, and didn't like to say anything about it."

The voice came no more, and daylight failed to afford any trace of a human footstep. And then, next day, toward evening, just as it was getting dark, the mysterious voice was heard once more in the dense mass of foliage overhead. At the repetition of the familiar suggestion Manning broke into a peal of unsteady laughter. He pointed upwards.

"Do you know what it is?" he asked. "It's a parrot—a parrot evidently escaped from somewhere close by, and beyond question belonging to some Englishman. Now, I wonder if that bird belongs to Addison? He's got any amount of birds there—in fact, birds are his particular hobby. He can do anything he likes with them. It's any money this parrot belongs to him."

"It must," Edith said. "But I don't see how this is going to help us."

Manning sat there furiously thinking. He moved presently a little farther into the open, then beckoned Edith to his side. Silently he pointed upwards. And there, on a branch a few feet above their heads, was a great gray parrot eyeing them with a sort of solemn friendliness and a peculiar twinkle in that beady little black orb of his.

"Lemon and seltzer!" he said. "Come and have a lemon and seltzer! Help yourself, my boy!"

"If we could only get hold of him!" Edith whispered.

"Ah, if we only could!" Manning said, with a deep breath. "Look at him! There isn't a feather out of place. He's too sleek and well fed to have escaped of his own accord. He's one of Addison's pets, and is probably allowed to fly about the forest as he likes. If we can only get hold of him, we are saved."

"Are we?" Edith asked eagerly. "How?"

"Well, the rest would be easy. We could write a little note to Addison and tie it around the bird's claw, telling him exactly where we are, and the rest is easy. Addison knows every inch of this ground, and he could reach us without the slightest trouble. It's any odds that bird goes back home some time or another, once a day to be fed, certainly. Here, Polly! Pretty bird!"

As the familiar tongue struck upon the bird's ear he burst into a laugh and hopped down two or three branches, till he was almost within grasp.

"Addison's bird for a million!" Manning cried. "That's his laugh to a note. Come along, Polly!"

But the parrot refused to come any closer. It was only when Manning produced a small portion of his precious food that the gray bird showed further signs of friendliness. It was maddening to have him just one yard out of reach when the absolute salvation of two human lives lay, so to speak, across those glossy gray wings. Manning and his companion stood there silent and motionless and hardly breathing in the tension of the moment. Then the parrot fluttered to the ground, croaking and snapping his beak at the tempting food. Manning dropped on his hands and knees and crawled cautiously forward, knowing that two lives depended upon the next moment. Then he took his coat from his back and, reaching forward, dropped it quietly over the shining mass of gray feathers. There was a little struggle and a volley of oaths in the Spanish tongue, and then the bird was safe in Manning's grasp.

"Take my pocketbook out of my pocket," he said, with the sweat pouring down his face. "Just write a few lines to Addison, explaining where we are. It's our only chance."

The note was written shakily enough, and then wound around one of the bird's claws and carefully tied with some strands of silk taken from Edith Carson's dress. After that Manning pitched the parrot high into the air, and he sailed away high over the treetops, screaming and chattering vehemently at the treatment to which he had been subjected.

"I hope to heaven he is going straight home," Manning said. "If so, we are saved, though I expect we shall have to wait till morning."

They sat around the fire now, talking freely enough, for their hearts were full of hope, and, moreover, before they settled down to sleep they had come to a perfect understanding.

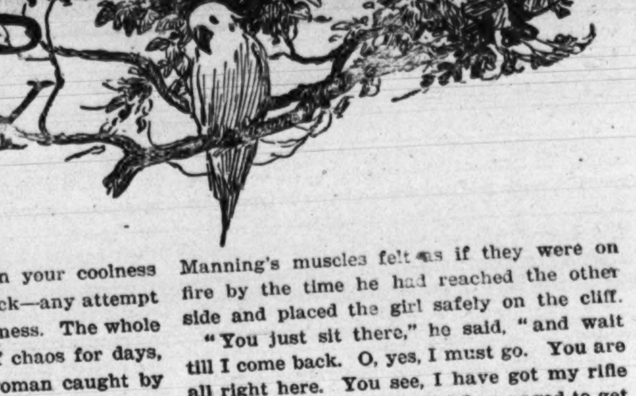
The sun was climbing high before Manning opened his eyes, and when he did so he saw the kindly eyes of his naturalist friend looking down upon him from behind his gold-rimmed spectacles. There were other men besides the famous naturalist gazing eagerly at the strange scene before them.

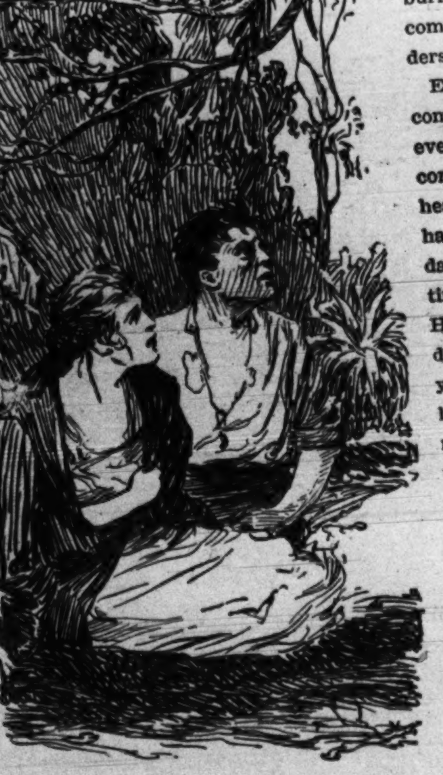
"You can tell me all about it presently, old man," Addison said. "Meanwhile, come along and bring the lady with you, and get a bath and a change of clothing. You have had a close call evidently. If it hadn't been for the parrot——"

"Lemon and seltzer! Lemon and seltzer!" croaked a voice overhead. "Help yourself!"

"O, I could do with one, Polly!" Manning laughed unsteadily. "You are a wise bird."

The PARROT'S CRY





"Come and have a lemon and seltzer!"

It Was a Welcome Sound to Two Helpless Mortals.

As Manning fell headlong into the room, full of one single, determined purpose, he was conscious of the amazing contrast between the conditions inside and out. He was half aware of what he saw, like one who dreams uneasily and illogically. For there all was peace and refinement and the little odds and ends of luxury that go to make up the thing we call home.

To begin with, Edith Carson was sitting at the piano playing some soft, elusive music to herself. There was just the suggestion of a smile on her face. The light from the subdued lamps reflected on the white blur of her dress and the diamonds in her dusky hair. Then she caught sight of Manning, and her expression changed to a sort of haughty amazement.

"Mr. Manning," she said, "what does this mean?"

Manning strode across the room and laid a heavy hand upon the girl's shoulder.

"Come along!" he said. "There is not a moment to be lost! Come without a word!"

Edith Carson rose to her feet.

"Really!" she protested. "Really!"

"O, there's no time for anything of that sort," Manning said bitterly. "I am not welcome, I know, but that's not the point. I will explain as we go along."

"You will explain now," the girl said coldly.

"Very well, then," Manning said between his teeth. "Those blackguards have risen at last. There's not a man on the estate who is loyal to Adair. I told you what they were—I warned you not to come here, in the disturbed state of the country. This isn't Europe; it's a little pocket handkerchief state in No Man's land. You ought to have stayed in the town. And now, to put it mildly, your life is in danger."

Still the girl failed to comprehend. She elevated her eyebrows daintily and scornfully.

"I stay here till the Adairs come back," she said.

Manning lost no time in further argument. He slipped his arm around the girl's waist and fairly lifted her off her feet as he carried her on to the balcony. Then he switched off the electric lights.

"Look," he said, "and listen!"

It was all soft, velvety darkness outside, a tranquil summer night, fair the stars powdering the sky overhead. But here and there lights glowed against the sky, and ever and again flashes of flames stabbed the darkness. And then there came in quick succession the sound of shots.

"There are over five hundred of the devils there," Manning said hoarsely, "looting and burning—yes, and murdering! And they are coming here! Now you are beginning to understand?"

Edith Carson drew a deep breath. It was coming home to her now, right enough. But even then, in that moment of peril, she was conscious of the feeling of resentment in her heart against the man by her side. For he had warned her of this—warned her of the danger of coming so far from the town at a time of great unrest—and he had been right. He had always been right, in his simple, dogged way, even from the moment, two years ago, when he had asked her to marry him and she had laughed him to scorn. And now here they were, side by side, face to face with a terror all the more alarming because neither of them knew in what form it had come.

"Where are the Adairs?" Edith asked.

"In Adigo by this time," Manning said. "I managed to warn them, as they came along in the car, and they turned back. They could do nothing by coming along, and I promised to look after you. Even then we had to fight for it. But the car is outside, and I am waiting. If you have the slightest regard for your safety, come with me at once."

Still the girl sat there hesitating.

"Where is Señor del Sartes?" she asked. "He would be able to stop all this, I am sure."

Manning smiled grimly under cover of the darkness. It was not for him to say just then that Del Sartes lay out there in the garden with a bullet through that black heart of his, and that the hand that fired the shot was still half clasped about the waist of her who asked the question.

"I cannot tell you," Manning said simply, "except that he is dead. But I can tell you this: Miguel del Sartes was no friend of yours. O, I know what you think. You think I was jealous of him, and perhaps I was. And I know that he had fascinated you with those beautiful manners of his, to say nothing of his handsome face. If he had been here half an hour before me, we should never have met again!"

"Señor del Sartes was a gentleman," Edith said.

"He wasn't," Manning said doggedly. "He was a black-hearted scoundrel. I couldn't tell you this before, because I was not sure, and I don't think you would have believed me, anyway. But this I can tell you: he had a wife up there in the mountains, in that lonely hacienda of his, a poor creature who had lost her reason because of his treatment of her. And now do you begin to understand? Now perhaps you will believe me when I tell you that this uprising was engineered by him—well, because he has a wife, and because he had dared to raise his eyes to you."

No words came from Edith Carson's lips, though she tried to smile, but she knew very well, deep down in her heart, that this was a true thing. And she knew that Manning had come all this way, taking his life in his hands, for her sake. Another shot or two rang out, and somewhere in the garden the two standing on the balcony could hear the patter of stealthy feet. Manning waited for no more. He lifted the girl in his arms and staggered out into the night.

He blundered down the path through the garden, and out into the road, where the car was waiting. He placed his burden inside and started the engine, after which he switched on the light. Then for a quarter of an hour or more the little car raced down the mountain road unmolested, save that every now and then a little flash of light from a rifle struck in the darkness. But they were through at length, and presently the car pulled up by the side of a deep ravine.

"We are fairly safe now," Manning said; "at least, we shall be till morning; and, after that, it largely depends upon your coolness and courage. We can't go back—any attempt to reach Adigo would be madness. The whole country will be in a state of chaos for days, and any English man or woman caught by those madmen would—well, you ought to know by this time."

They sat there, talking more or less fitfully, till the night began to fade, and then suddenly the sun shot up over the mountain peaks in a blaze of golden glory. It was wonderfully still and quiet there, with the snow-capped mountains behind them, and the deep river, cutting its way through the rocky gorge, lay at their feet. It was only a narrow gorge, not more than sixty or seventy feet at the outside, and the stream ran between, with a steep precipice on either side. On the farther bank the virgin forest began, a glorious tangle of trees and undergrowth, stretching back for a mile or two, till the plains were reached, and it was for these plains that Manning was making.

"Perhaps I had better tell you what I am trying to do," he said. "We can't go back, because that is impossible. We should never get through to Adigo. And if we cross the river we may reach that little station where Addison and his assistants have established themselves. You have met Addison?"

Edith nodded. She had met the distinguished naturalist more than once at the Adairs' hacienda, and, indeed, she rather liked the somewhat eccentric individual who had come all those miles from home in the interests of science.

"We shall be all right there," Manning said, "if we can only reach the place. There are half a dozen good men with Addison, and I know they have got at least one machine gun there. But we haven't done with the danger yet. We have got to get through two miles of virgin forest, unless we go down the river's bank on the far side, and that might take at least a week. I have crossed that belt of forest only once before, and if I lose my way we can just sit down and starve."

"O, I am ready, if you are," Edith said. "And I am very sorry, Tom. I have behaved very badly to you, and I want to tell you so. I suppose I was angry because you were right."

"O, we can go into all that presently," Manning said, almost roughly. "We have got something else to think about now besides apologies. Those people are sure to follow us, even if it is only for the sake of getting hold of the car. What we have got to do now is to get across the river and cut off our retreat."

Across that rocky gorge, from one side to the other, with the river running two hundred feet below, was a slender steel rope, a kind of endless band, running over wheels at either end. Suspended by this was a sort of basket arrangement by means of which the natives of those parts crossed the ravine. Edith looked at it and shuddered. She was plucky enough, as a rule, but the idea of crossing in that basket filled her with dismay.

"Is that the only way?" she faltered.

"Absolutely," Manning said. "It's quite safe. Now, I am going to put you in the basket, and I shall stand over you with my feet on either side. Now, then, screw your courage up. Think what would happen if any of those people were following us, and it's any money some of them are doing so. I think I had better blindfold you."

"No, no!" Edith cried. "That would be horrible. How brave you are, Tom!"

Manning grunted. He was in no smiling mood. He loved the girl by his side, but he could not altogether smother a certain resentment against her because she had quite willfully placed herself in this position. He lifted her without ceremony in his arms and dumped her down in the bottom of the basket. He stood with his feet on either side, swaying perilously, and then began to work the steel rope over the wheel. It was a long and arduous task with the double weight, and Manning's muscles felt as if they were on fire by the time he had reached the other side and placed the girl safely on the cliff.

"You just sit there," he said, "and wait till I come back. O, yes, I must go. You are all right here. You see, I have got my rifle and cartridges to fetch, and I managed to get hold of a certain amount of food last night, which is in the car. I planned all this out as I came along. I knew, if I got to the hacienda before Del Sartes, that we should have a good sporting chance. And, thank God, I was not too late!"

Manning came back presently with the basket loaded to the top, and then slowly and patiently proceeded to saw through the steel hawser with a file. It was tedious work, but presently the last strand snapped and the wire rope disappeared in the bed of the river. With the snapping of the last strand something seemed to give way in Manning, too, for he wiped the heavy drops from his hot face and, for the first time since they started, his features relaxed into a smile.

"I think we are all right now," he said. "The wretches can't follow us—at least, not for a day or two, anyhow, and by that time we ought to reach our friends."

"A day or two!" Edith exclaimed. "I thought it was only two or three miles. Surely we shan't be all that time getting through the forest?"

"Well, we may, or we may not," Manning said cheerfully. "If we take the wrong turning, it may be a week."

He spoke easily enough, and with a certain indifference that he was far from feeling. He knew only too well, sportsman and wanderer as he was, what it meant to get off the track even in the four or five square miles of that dense forest. He had heard of natives, men accustomed to the woodland life, who had laid down there and died of starvation within half a mile of their own huts. It was the time of the year, too, when the vegetation grew with almost savage luxuriance, so that Manning could see, almost at a first glance, how all trace of track and path had disappeared. They were only a mile or two from safety, but then he had heard and seen enough of that wild country on the other side of the ravine to know the danger in which they stood.

But of this he said nothing. There would be time enough for that when the dreaded catastrophe stared them in the face. He had no guide or compass, nothing but his own instinct and the memory of one journey through that dense forest. Here and there was a patch of clear ground, and in one of these they camped presently and partook of a meal.

It was late in the afternoon before Manning made his first attempt at progress, only to find himself driven back presently on to the clearing, with a cold sensation at his heart and the knowledge that he and his companion were in deadly peril. For there was no sign of a track to be seen anywhere, and, though there were openings here and there, they were breast high in a sea of grass and luxuriant foliage. To go back was impossible, to go forward something like madness. And as the day went on and night came, followed by another dawn, Edith Carson began to see that Manning was keeping something from her. Up to now she had undergone no hardship particularly, for the nights were mild enough, and her thin evening dress, together with Manning's coat, had been sufficient to protect her.

She turned to him suddenly.

"You are afraid?" she challenged.

"Not for myself," Manning replied. "At a pinch I could do the few miles downstream and swim the ravine. I have matches and some cartridges, and I am used to this sort of life, as you know. But—yes, I might just as well tell you, we're in terrible danger, and I am to blame."

"You are not!" the girl cried. "We may be in terrible danger, but nothing like the peril I should have had to face if you had not come to my assistance."

"I am glad you understand that," Manning said curtly.

"O, I do! Del Sartes stirred up that strike. There would have been no trouble but for him. And he did it because—because—O, I cannot say it!"

"Because he wanted to get hold of you," Manning interrupted. "His idea was that no one on the estate should survive last

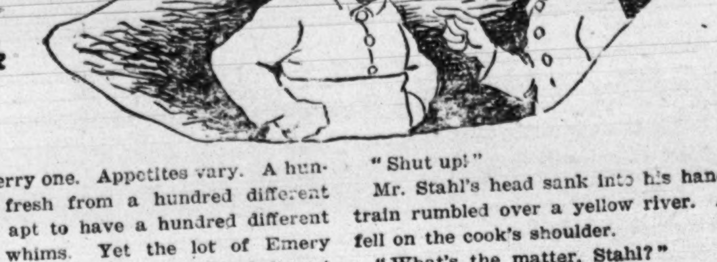
The KNOCKER



by Oney Fred Sweet

The Cook Took His Complaints Seriously Until That Night "Back Home in Tennessee."

EMERY STAHL took pride in his work. He was a cook—one of the best, he claimed, in any of Chicago's "grab 'em off the counter" eating places. Hidden from the public, he flopped eggs and steaks in a manner that gave him a great deal of personal pleasure. He eyed waiters in a superior sort of fashion as he toiled over a hot range. When he was drafted in the army he not only stated his qualifications as a cook but insisted he was an excellent one.

And it goes without saying that when a lanky private with a quaint accent entered knocks against the methods which Emery employed in preparing the government's rations Emery got up on his ear. Cooking for a company of infantrymen in Uncle Sam's new army was not exactly like turning out quick dishes for the dainty appetites of Chicago loop hounds, but Emery congratulated himself on being able to adjust himself to the new conditions and he had become an army cook with a vengeance.

The lanky private, known in Company B as "Tennessee," due to his nativity, was never quite pleased with Emery's offerings. He began to kick the minute he entered the mess hall, kept it up while he was being served, and up until he had washed his mess kit.

Emery Stahl's pride was touched. He sprinkled catsup over the hash, took added pains with the coffee making, thoroughly flavored the stew, but all to no avail. Tennessee found fault and he voiced his complaints in loud tones and in an accent that began to grate on Mr. Stahl, sweating among the pots and pans.

And at last Mr. Stahl could stand it no longer. He walked over to the table where Tennessee sat and told him that he was not the sort of a cook that would stand for criticism.

"You're the only crab in the outfit," flared Emery Stahl.

"I notice everybody else is eating it."

Mr. Stahl was seeing red. A corporal separated them.

Matters failed to improve. So far as Tennessee was concerned the coffee was always to weak or too strong, the oatmeal burnt or not cooked enough, the stew a failure. Even on Sunday, when Emery Stahl arose just after midnight to make biscuits, Tennessee failed to enthuse. And no one in the company came to Mr. Stahl's defense.

Mr. Stahl lost weight, lost sleep, lost pep. Tennessee was getting his goat.

The life of a cook in the army is not a particularly merry one. Appetites vary. A hundred men, fresh from a hundred different homes, are apt to have a hundred different brands of whims. Yet the lot of Emery Stahl might have been happy had it not been for Tennessee. Tennessee minced and picked over and howled. He ate twice as much as any other man in the company and he made ten times as much fuss about it.

Emery gloomed over the way things were going.

"What's the use," he sighed one afternoon to his kitchen police. "You can't please that guy."

"Tennessee is sure some epicure," retorted the k. p. as he scoured at a pan. "Wonder how long before they send us 'over there.'"

"I ain't thinking about that," nodded Emery. "That stuff'll all take care of itself. How'd you like that apple pudding I made this noon?"

"Great, but Tennessee——"

"Shut up!"

But the days of drill could not go on forever. The Huns were hammering away at the allied line. The summer day came when Company B was marched aboard a train. All night they traveled. Mr. Stahl, from his headquarters in the baggage car, sent provisions of coffee and sandwiches down the aisles.

Such epigrams as "We'll get the kaiser's helmet" and "Berlin or bust" were written with chalk on the side of the car. Girls flooded the station platforms. Through the old U. S. A. sped the trainload of trained lads that were to fight for their country in a foreign land.

Emery Stahl took no part in writing the epigrams on the car's side. He chatted from no car window with the girls on the depot platforms. He was keeping the bunch supplied with nourishing food while they were en route.

Emery had grown rather stubborn. Tennessee had ejected bitter into his life. Emery prided himself on being a cook. He prided himself on being a cook as a prima donna prides herself on her high notes, as a dogcatcher prides himself on his ability with a looped wire, as a banker prides himself on his canniness in making an investment.

There are a great many folks in the world who shrivel under criticism.

Two khaki clad youths returned to the baggage car with an empty boiler.

"How'd they like those sandwiches?" inquired Emery, hungering for praise.

"They all seemed to like 'em, all except Tenne——"

"Shut up!"

Mr. Stahl's head sank into his hands. The train rumbled over a yellow river. A hand fell on the cook's shoulder.

"What's the matter, Stahl?"

"Nothin', except I'm going to quit being cook."

"Why?"

"O, because."

"I thought you was crazy about cooking."

"I want to be reduced to the ranks."

The train slowed down at the foot of a mountain—a mountain covered with trees and bushes and vines. It was a very beautiful part of the country and Stahl leaned far out of the baggage car doorway to look it over. From nature he was seeking a balm for the disappointment that was eating away in his heart. He lost his footing—fell. He was jarred a bit by the fall. And in the time that it took for him to pull himself together the train had picked up speed.

So far as Emery Stahl could see there wasn't a station within a million miles. The tail of the train disappeared around a curve in the mountains. Mr. Stahl wondered what Uncle Sam would think, how he could get in touch with some one that would get him in touch again with the bunch. A path led up the mountain side. The former cook of Company B took to the path.

Emery Stahl found himself in a country that was not a bit like Chicago nor the camp spot he had recently left. It was a wild, mountainous country. Birds sang among the riot of green. And when they ceased to sing the hills were uncannily quiet. Mr. Stahl did not know that he was in the heart of a section of feuds and moonshine whisky—a part of the country where the blood was pure American, a place where folks stuck within a few miles from the place where they were born and where strangers seldom ventured.

After a time Mr. Stahl made the discovery that he was not getting anywhere. He was traveling in a circle. Darkness was creeping on. He began to grow alarmed. The quiet and the songs of the birds mocked. Almost frantically he hit off on a path that was hardly a path at all, so overtwined it was with vines. And then, when night had fully fallen, he saw in the distance the light from a mountain cabin.

He approached the cabin until he could peer into the window. An old man and an old woman were sitting at the table, the evening meal long since finished. They were quaint types. The man was long of limb and long as to whiskers. The woman had a shrewd, thin face.

The man must have heard a noise among the vines at the window, because he drew his pipe from his mouth and reached toward his gun that hung above the fireplace. Mr. Stahl slunk back into the vines and darkness. And then he heard a voice within that caused him to almost forget his strange environment. It was the voice of Tennessee. He would have known that voice anywhere.

"It's me, pap."

Mr. Stahl rose to a position that gave him a clear view of what was going on inside.

"Am the wah ovah?"

"No, pap, I jes' dropped off to see yer. I walked clean up from the Gap."

Tennessee was removing his army equipment.

"We done had suppah," beamed the mother, "but if you all will jes sit down I'll fix you a snack."

Emery Stahl witnessed the unexpected homecoming with a mixture of emotions. He convinced himself that Tennessee had not deserted. He had simply been unable to resist the temptation of getting off at the Gap to give the home folks a visit before going on—before reaching the coast, before going "over there."

"You done shoot any of them Germans yet?" asked the old man.

"Not yet, pap, but I'm on my way and ah'm going to pick 'em off like I used to pick squirrels out of the trees."

"You done growed some," ventured the mother, shading her eyes from the lamp's light.

"Ah done been way up no'th," announced Tennessee.

The woman began to busy herself at the stove.

Mr. Stahl waited, uncertain of what procedure to take. It had been months since he had been on friendly terms with Tennessee. He had come to hate every inch of the fellow's lankiness. He had come to loath the drawl which the fellow had used to criticise his viands.

The food was brought to the clothless table—corn bread and black coffee and salt pork.

There was a pause. Tennessee squared back from the table, eyed the dishes before him, dug into them.

"Taste pretty good?" asked the woman.

Mr. Stahl, peering in at the window, caused such a rustling among the vines when the answer came that he brought about his discovery and a bed for the night before the two should take the train to rejoin their company.

"Co'n bread's a bit soggy," scowled Tennessee, "and the coffee ain't just aftah my taste." Then his face lighted with enthusiasm. "You ought to see what we all get in the ahmy—heaps of everythin' and cooked, say cooked so it makes youh mouth watah, that's what ah mean."

WOMAN—THE MATERIALIST?

by H.R.R Hertzberg

The Woman Hater Says Yes.

"IDEALISM being the general theme of this meeting," said the member of the One Thousand Word Story club called the "Gentle Woman Hater"—because his indictments of womankind (no, not of womanhood) were delivered with the air of the loving parent whom the punishment administered to the peccant offspring pains ever so much more than it could possibly pain the recipient—"I maintain that man is the idealistic and woman the materialistic sex. Witness the following true story:

"Though he was only 26 years old, Tom Forthwright had laid the foundation of a distinguished political career. Owing partly to his gift of extemporaneously picturesque speech—a valuable gift in the southwest—partly to the cheerfully good natured disposition which made him a successful 'mixer,' and partly to his undeniable sincerity and integrity of purpose and action, he was the most popular young man in politics throughout the wide San Porfirio district.

"As yet he held no public office, but he nursed a great ambition—that of representing the district in congress. He did not intend to seek congressional honors till he was 30, because he considered himself in need of further preparation for a position so exalted, even if his election to congress would mean the fulfillment of his one still greater desire by enabling him to marry the girl whom he loved truly and to whom he had recently become engaged. He couldn't do more than merely dream of marriage now, because his law practice revenue didn't suffice to buy his Alice the 'goodies and pretties' to which he deemed her entitled, thanks to her dainty prettiness and indubitably angelic excellence.

"Wherefore, thus determined to wait four years more, he gave his glad and unqualified promise not only to vote for but also to place in nomination—at the Democratic congressional convention to assemble within three months—an older man who was his friend and a clean and capable gentleman, when this friend visited him to ask for his support.

"No sooner had the candidate, assured of Tom's cordial and constant coöperation, left Tom's office than it was invaded by five other men—all of them, like Tom himself, delegates to the congressional convention and representing every one of the five counties which constituted the district of San Porfirio.

Their spokesman, a personage of power in the party, said that they were a committee appointed by a caucus of a large majority of the congressional convention delegations; that Tom had not been called into the caucus because those holding it wished to tender him an exceedingly pleasant surprise, and that the caucus had decided to offer him, Tom Forthwright, the Democratic congressional nomination—which, of course, was tantamount to election in this solidly Democratic district.

"For a moment Tom was mightily tempted. 'Here's the chance, the great chance,' he thought in a flash. 'Marriage—Alice and happiness!—Alice and happiness!—And my lesser, yet still high, ambition realized at the same time!'

"But the temptation was not permitted to persist. So that Tom first expressed his gratitude and then declined the honor, pleading immaturity and its consequent unworthiness. And, finally, he urged his hearers to support, instead of himself, the friend to whom he had promised his own help; and, by the force of the impression which his eloquent unselfishness wrought on those five men's hearts, won both their consent to his request and their assurance that, if it were possible to keep the matter from the candidate's knowledge, the latter should not learn of the offer made to Tom.

"Having emulated St. George in slaying a nowise inconsiderable dragon of temptation, Forthwright must have been incredibly superhuman not to feel the need of relating his achievement to the one woman and of receiving at her little hands the laurel wreath due a true, valiant, and victorious knight, Alice's approval and the testimonial of an especially loving caress or so—he was sure that he deserved these and he naturally desired them. Consequently, after he had sworn Alice to secrecy, he acquainted her with the momentous happenings of the eventful morning.

"Following the fashion of any man who is speaking the truth and not boasting in the least while he tells of a matter which he cannot but know to be distinctly to his credit, Tom Forthwright failed to look at Alice until he had finished his soliloquy and found—to his astonishment—that she hadn't come over to perch on the arm of the big chair and set the wreath on his hair, to pet him, and to praise him in that velvet soft voice of hers—

"And then, when he did look up, he saw that her eyes, which he had always taken to be blue like a sun blessed sky, weren't warmly blue at all, but coldly gray, and that there was no smile on her lips, now strangely thin and curveless. And her voice quite lacked the softness of velvet as she spoke:

"'You are going—without delay—to hunt up your friend to whom you made that foolish, rash promise to obtain his release—by advising him that your happiness depends upon it—and if he refuses to release you, you are going to reconsider your decision and accept that nomination——

"'I cannot!' protested Tom. 'Since I have pledged my word, freely and unconditionally! Dearest, it can't be done—in honor, in decency!'

"'Or,' continued the girl, 'our engagement is ended forever. I shouldn't think of marrying a person who put his pride above me and my welfare. Such a person's not to be trusted with my future. You may choose.'

"Tom fully understood that she meant just what she said. And the understanding hurt, bitterly. Nevertheless—perhaps because a second temptation is overcome more easily than was the first, even though the second be bigger and stronger—Tom rose, to bow, and sound a toneless good-by, and go, and stay gone.

"Without wishing to hammer the—physically—fairer sex," added the Gentle Woman Hater, after a bit of a pause, "I am convinced that, say, seven-tenths of our latter day girls would prove horribly wise, in Alice's style, under similar circumstances. No, I am not the 'Tom Forthwright' of my story," he concluded, regretfully.

(The regret was, conceivably, due to the fact that he was the husband of the story's "Alice.")

The SPLENDID CHANCE

SYNOPSIS.

Katherine wanted to paint well more than anything in the world, so she said good-by to Dick Conrad without a pang, offering a sisterly cheek for his salutation just before the boat slid away from the dock. She resented hotly the quizzical air of a young Englishman who happened on their leave-taking. One day a caricature she had made of him fluttered across the deck and he caught it. In the days that followed they were together a great deal, and just before she left the boat he asked if he might come to see her in Paris. She began her precious year of study, plunging with ardor into her work in the studio. When her friends, the Whartons, were about to leave Paris she mentioned Edgerton's proposed visit. They hastened to discourage the budding friendship, hinting that she is an ineligible partie for a man of his rank and distinction.

THIRD INSTALLMENT.

EDGERTON COMES.

WHEN the telegram came, when Mme. Bonnet handed it interestedly out to her from the little cage as she sped into the hall on her return from the académie that Friday afternoon, and she stood rather dumbly there, reading it over the second time, a voice came out of the shadows by madame's recess that was so mild that it was not for a minute recognizable as the voice of her neighbor.

"No bad news, I hope?" he offered, coming forward awkwardly.

"O, yes," said Katherine dully, and then, "Why no—no. It doesn't matter," and she fled up the stairs in a frame of mind as distracted as her stupid speech. In sharp reaction from that first blank disappointment came cowardly relief. The awkwardness of meeting was postponed for a time. She wouldn't have to lie awake tonight, planning what they would do, and what she would say—feeling foolishly expectant in the thought of that momentous visit . . . feeling chagrined if it fell flat and uninspired.

It was better to have his letters going on as usual.

And yet, after all, that was a very blank Saturday. On the whole, so her mood veered, she wished he had come and had it over with.

The first visit appeared rather humorously in the aspect of a dose of medicine on whose success the rest of their friendship depended. Decidedly she was a young lady of too much humor for her own tranquillity.

Sunday also opened very emptily. In expectation of Edgerton's arrival she had declined a trip to the Bois with Etienne and Louis and Olga, and now the perfect loveliness of the day, the relaxing warmth that lured and beckoned, waked restlessness and discontent as she sat over her coffee and rolls in a neighboring crémerie.

Then she became aware that the Surly Man and his small charge were at the next table, also at breakfast. He had his back to her, his big shoulders hunched over his paper, a coffee cup in his hand. The child faced her, gravely staring above the rim of her mug.

Presently when the Surly Man wandered off about the shop collecting favorite rolls the little thing slipped deliberately down from her chair and came slowly to Katherine's table, standing looking at her with that dark, unwavering gaze.

She smiled a little shyly herself at her visitor, half fearful of frightening her away.

"And what is your name?" she said in English.

"Peggy," said the child clearly. "Peggy in English. In French I am Marguerite."

"They are both very pretty. But which do you like the best?"

A grave consideration of this dwelt in the little girl's face. Then she turned, cast a sudden glance across the room at the Surly Man returning to the table with a heaped plate, and then gave Katherine a look, fleeting, mysterious, embarrassed.

"Peggy," she said with a little gasp, as if her reasons for it made it a confession, and turned and precipitated against the Robert that she adored.

Few young men care for the impetuous affection of a public attack that grips them dangerously about the knees, but the Surly Man, though Katherine saw the color mount in his face, offered no suggestion of rebuke. Having clasped a steadying hand an instant over the rocking rolls, he put that hand down upon the little girl's head with a gesture of affection that was curiously touching, and when he had lifted her back upon her chair, and buttered a fresh roll for her and refilled her mug, Katherine registered a sudden, enlightening discovery about him also.

"Perhaps he's just shy, too!" she thought. But that was not wholly the case.

It became the case for her thoughts, however, and she saw the young man's gruffness through eyes of sympathy. He was so oddly alone, with that little sister—and how the child adored him! The English Peggy had been dear to her because it was the name of her brother for her—Katherine had divined that in a flash. What old little things they were, these mites, and what quaint things went on in back of their heads!

And as she watched the two of them—for the young man's back was to her and his paper again engrossed him—she saw that the child had a droll way of drinking only when he did. Several times the little Peggy gripped her mug firmly, in hopeful expectancy, but if the young man put down his coffee cup or his glass of water untasted the child put down her mug. When he drank she drank, methodically, watchfully. It was one of those queer secrets of childhood.

She wondered if the man knew, or if this hidden play went on unseen through all their meals.

At the end she saw that he knew. For he told the child to finish her milk, and as she hesitated he raised his own glass with an air of beautiful casualness and kept it at his lips until her milk was drained. And Katherine's sympathy went out to him in a queerly pitying way, although he appeared such a self-sufficient young man, stoutly able to repel all manifestations of interest.

Perhaps it was his very air of assurance that made him all the more pitiable. The red wreath on the child's hat with that amazingly blue sash!

She wished, with a woman's intrusive and amiable recklessness, that there was something that she could do for them.

. . . .

The chance came with unexpected suddenness. On that very Sunday—a lonely, drifting one for herself, given over to letters and reveries and a brief walk upon the boulevards that disgusted her with all strolling Frenchmen forever, she told herself—the little Peggy was taken down with cold and fever. Upon Mme. Bonnet's mentioning, some three days later, that "la petite, là-bas" was ill Katherine discovered that the good madame was aiding in the nursing, although monsieur was devoted as a mother, madame declared, nodding emphatically.

Katherine put no questions, refraining from appearing to interrogate madame upon the subject of a young gentleman and an arrived sculptor, but she did make bold, with what she assured herself was unmixed kindness of motive untouched by feminine curiosity, to tap at Robert MacNare's door and ask if there was anything she could do for the child. She had had quite a little experience with her small brothers, but she did not get as far as that in her little speech to MacNare.

She met with a scarcely opened door and a curt refusal. Thank you, but no help was needed.

On her way upstairs she thought of several things that she would like to happen. Particularly she hoped that Peggy would have fits—harmless fits, of course—in the night and he would come flying to her, craving her skill.

It is not often that life falls into the whim of our suggestions. But two nights later events unfolded with the thorough retribution of the third act of a tragedy.

At 11 o'clock the Surly Man came knocking at her door, a very distraught and hastily attired Surly Man, demanding, not beseeching, her presence on the floor below while he went for a doctor. He had wakened to find Peggy in a choking paroxysm. There was no telephone in the building and Mme. Bonnet was spending the night with a neighbor.

Katherine was a little scared by this prompt response of fate, and when she hurried down with him, in informal dressing gown and slippers, the child's condition shocked her beyond all thoughts but those of fear.

Peggy was sitting up in bed, gasping in a horrible, strangled way. Her tortured little face was darkening with blood.

"What is it? She never had this——" The young man hung over her in an agony of helplessness, one arm about the shaking little figure. Over his shoulder he flung a look that was a command at Katherine.

"You run like the devil for the nearest doctor! I daren't leave her. Try the one at the corner. Quick!"

But Katherine had seen croup before, though never such an extremity as this. She flew to the table where there were medicines and an alcohol heater and a moment later she was holding a spoonful of white vaseline in the blaze, unmindful of her blistering fingers. Pouring the warm stuff into another spoon she gave it ot the strangling child.

"She must cough it up," she said desperately. "She must!" And cough it up poor little Peggy did, with the last remnant of her gasping little strength.

And when her head drooped back against the young man's arms with a spent sigh, the dark color fading splotchily from her face, Katherine took her from him and sent him for the doctor.

MacNare returned with a slender, bearded man, whose keen brown eyes behind thickly convexed lenses stared rather hard to find the child, made sweet and fresh in her reordered bed drawn out in the middle of the studio, clinging to the hand of a very young girl in a blue dressing gown with two ropes of light hair down her back like Marguerite's. Katherine had been too busy with Peggy to remember her own appearance.

Nor was the doctor's astonishment lessened by MacNare.

"Dr. Thibault, this is—er—er——" Frowningly the Surly Man confronted his guest. "I don't believe I ever knew your name," he blurted.

"Katherine turned to the doctor. "I am Miss King. I am on the floor above and came down when the child was choking."

For just one minute the Frenchman's face permitted the revelation of his thoughts. To have a girl with such hair on the floor above—and not to know her name! It was incredible! Then he devoted himself to the small invalid. When he had taken stock of affairs he turned toward Katherine again with an air of admiration that had nothing at all to do with her braids, and paid her the compliment that comes only sincerely to a physician's lips.

"You would have made a good nurse, Mademoiselle King. You have had experience?"

"With my brothers. Now if there is nothing more that I can do——?"

"You have done everything." He made her a grave bow.

"Then I'll say good night."

At the door the Surly Man shot forward and gripped her hand.

"I'm glad you knew what to do," he said with a deep breath. "And I—I want——" Emotion too strong for speech was struggling inarticulately within him. He did not lift his eyes to her face. Some perception of the past blackness of his conduct was further complicating his expression.

"I'm so glad that I could help," said Katherine quickly. And then, emerging from her deep relief and gratefulness into a very human triumph, she spread her graciousness a trifle expansively. "And if you need me again tonight—or if there is anything that I can do tomorrow for your little sister——"

Abruptly his hand withdrew from hers.

"She is my daughter," he said hurriedly.

Then why on earth did she call him Robert? That was what Katherine wanted to know, staring solemnly wide eyed in the dark.

His daughter! How amazing!

It seemed a disconcerting fact, but presently her vigorous imagination, only momentarily stunned, laid hold of the circumstances and constructed an entire story. And its pathos reinvested the Surly Man with that draping glamour of romance from which the first shocked discovery of his wedded past had contrived, curiously enough, to divest.

His young wife had been beautiful and adored. Her death had broken his heart and he hated all women because they were living while she was gone. So he lived alone with his little child and his artist's dreams. It was very tragic. And Katherine, having completed the creation, indulged a woman's passion for sequels. She reflected, as she yielded to her neglected sleep, that it was a pity that he was not ten years older. Miss Anne was so sympathetic—when one knew her. But the sculptor, unfortunately, was not much more than 30. However, since he had done with youthful romance, perhaps.

Sleep, impatiently, snuffed out the rest.

Live, live, live! The sun and stars shall light you!"

Forgetful of the ban upon songstresses, Katherine was caroling at her easel shortly after her return from the académie the next afternoon.

"'Live, live, live! Some spot of earth invite you—
Live, live, live. Some face and heart delight you.'

"Come in," she broke off her song to call, looking over her blue aproned shoulder at the door, expectant of the American ladies from overhead who were to report about some tickets for a play.

At sight of the Surly Man, standing rather hesitantly in the doorway, she freed her thumb quickly from the palette and came forward in welcome.

"Do come in. How is little Peggy today? I inquired of Madame Bonnet at noon and she said that she was better."

"She is. Much," MacNare sententiously vouchsafed. He was in his sculptor's blouse, and his hands, though fresh washed, bore unmistakable traces of clay about the close cut nails. It was evident that he had run up from his work on the spur of resolution.

"But you are busy," he objected, with a look at her easel.

"Only puttering. And I'd do better to let it alone a bit. Will you take this chair? It's really man size and comfy."

She spoke rapidly, intent upon pleasant hospitality. There was something about this gruff young man, with all his surliness, that stirred both feminine curiosity and a motherly impulse to soften his aloofness.

"No, no—I only came for a minute."

Katherine perched on the wide wicker arm of a chair facing him. She made no motion to take off her very painty apron, fearing that might suggest a criticism of his workaday blouse, and above its long blue folds her fresh tinted face looked curiously small and young.

"And is the croup all gone?" she asked as he stood silent.

"O, yes. Thibault says that came from too heavy a meal last night. She was so much better from her cold then that I didn't know more than to indulge her."

"I expect you have your hands full," she ventured sympathetically.

He did not immediately reply and she saw, to her surprise, that a tide of dark color was rising in his rather white face.

"I don't know how to thank you," he said abruptly. "But perhaps you are really a person who doesn't care to be thanked—I've read that there are such persons!"

Katherine laughed. "O, no! I like to be thanked very much," she said mischievously. "Please go ahead."

Very blankly he eyed her. Then meeting her smiling eyes he smiled, too, a little stiffly as one unaccustomed to this relaxing intimacy.

"I wish I knew how," he said. "Your promptness saved her."

"O, you could have brought a doctor in time. But I was too frightened to wait. Croup's a horrible thing. You're very fortunate that she never had it before. My brother Donald had more than one siege, poor lad."

Again he was silent, still struggling, it appeared, with the sense of his deep obligation. "I wish that there was something that I could do to repay you," he ploughed on at last, uncomfortably intent, and she broke out in sensitive opposition. "But I'm not a doctor so you can't send a check! And is a little neighborly kindness so burdensome to you?"

Her eyes met his with a sudden little flash. This time it was he who smiled the first, a slow and reluctant smile, admissive of that quality with which she reproached him.

It was the first time that Katherine had really looked at the Surly Man; he had been a vaguely featured, black browed person draped with the fog of both resentments and sympathies, but now her quick glance absorbed a host of impressions. He was black browed, indeed, and black eyed, with heavy black hair growing low on a wide white forehead. His nose was straight and finely cut; his cheek bones were rather heavy; his mouth had a grim, locked look, and his square jawed chin was blunt.

He looked like a person who had made up his mind about things as a bulldog holds to a bone. But there came to her the softening memory not alone of his helpless agony last night but of the gentle way he had put his hand on Peggy's head that Sunday morning as she had gripped his knees in her impulsive onslaught.

Very decisively Katherine whisked the question of gratitude to the winds. "Will you feel better if I promise to have a spasm some night and call upon you? Then we'll be even."

Her flippancy elicited no lightness of response. He told her rather dryly, "Yes, I'd feel better if you would."

"How you hate to be grateful! But you needn't be—really. It didn't make a particle of difference between us. You mustn't bother the girl. I'm not going to play the whining cad who makes it worse. You're right. We've got to act the straight game in this. After all—no one's to blame, as—I thought they were. Will you forgive me, Muriel?"

"Jim!"

As he grew stronger her strength weakened. In parting she clung to the man she loved. They had been sweethearts from the day she first toddled into his schoolboy arms. And now it was to be a real farewell. Jim must go, not only for a time—but all time—out of her life. Only so could they play the game. Muriel knew that, and he was ready to obey. Yet it was hard.

Later, when she came along up the path from the picturesque ravine, the place where a listener had stood was empty.

Robert Vennerton laughed. It was still summer, yet a summer that foreshadowed autumn. But the sun still shone, though the man who stood alone on the terrace overlooking the gay gardens with their riot of color did not laugh because of the beauty around or because life was still a summer's dream. The day of dreams had passed, yet he rejoiced because in the awakening he had won his greatest victory.

Was it won? Was it won? Here was a question for controversy. Has the man who has decided to accept a perilous commission won his moral victory over coward fear before his work is accomplished?

Maybe—since resolve is the keynote to every gallant deed.

So Robert Vennerton squared those fighter's shoulders of his and went into the battle.

Ralph Laythorpe sat in his study when his prospective son-in-law entered, but he looked up welcoming one whose comings he always dreaded. True, here stood the man who had relaunched his ship on the sea of life—but at what price?

Muriel's father, loving his only child so dearly, could guess much. He dared not guess all.

"I'm here on a difficult task, sir," said Vennerton; "will you hear me patiently to the end?"

Laythorpe nodded, but he kept silence. He wondered what this opening portended. He wondered still more as he listened to the strangest tale a lover such as Vennerton ever told.

To begin with, the latter explained how he had grown weary of the great adventure of fortune building, and came to England for a long rest. Thoughts of marriage had come to him with his leisure—and he had met Muriel. He had proposed to her, since she seemed to embody his best ideal for a wife. It was not now that Muriel had failed in his estimate, but—he must honestly confess—the picture of domestic bliss had ceased to attract.

A friend had written to him concerning a great scheme of prospecting and opening up the country round Temagami in Canada. Those primeval forests of Ontario held such fortunes as seem but fairy tales to the skeptical. The fever was on him to prove that this scheme was no legend but startling truth. Only—there was one drawback. He could not launch upon his venture if he were married. It meant years in the wilds with prospectors and mineral experts. Years of toil before the reaping of golden harvest.

"You mean," said Laythorpe slowly, "that you wish to break off the engagement with Muriel?"

Vennerton rose suddenly and went to the window.

"Yes," he answered hoarsely.

Muriel's father remained silent for some time. What lay behind this tale? How did Fate work in this?

With his back towards him the man at the window continued to speak. He wished to behave fairly, he said. If Muriel or her father desired to hold him to his engagement he was willing to be held.

That was why he had come first to Mr. Laythorpe rather than to his daughter.

Ralph Laythorpe hesitated. There was no doubt in his mind as to how Muriel would receive this news. Though he had resolutely stifled down his suspicions that his child was sacrificing herself for him he had known it from the first.

And here was an unexpected, unimagined deliverance.

Very quietly, almost indifferently, Vennerton was explaining that he wished the matter to be conducted with a complete and entirely friendly understanding. He hinted vaguely of a mistake somewhere, leaving Laythorpe to suppose that this had been a contemplated marriage of expediency, and that Vennerton himself had never supposed Muriel's heart to be very deeply concerned in it.

But all was left for the father to arrange. If he thought it was for Muriel's happiness, then Robert Vennerton would give up a more congenial enterprise and try to face the dream of domestic bliss again.

As touching business, the younger man added—as an evident afterthought—Laythorpe would regard the matter of that temporary loan exactly as though the marriage were taking place. There would be no difference in the terms of the agreement.

When Vennerton had gone—out into the wilderness, leaving the enchanted garden of dreams behind him—Laythorpe sent for his daughter.

After all it was not a very difficult interview—not nearly so difficult as the one in which Muriel had refused to let her father see her face.

He saw it now—radiant with a supreme happiness. There were tears in the blue eyes, an overflowing of that joy which heralded this moment of freedom from self-imposed bonds. But there was a vague wonder in the depths, too. Was it possible she had been so deceived? To her, during those six haunting weeks, it had seemed that she had been shown a man's whole heart—and seen her own image and that alone reflected upon it.

And now she heard that this was a mistake. That Robert Vennerton had chafed at the prospect of tender bonds, and already longed for the wider, freer life of adventure, ambition, careless bachelorhood.

Somehow it stung the girl's woman's pride to know how lightly he had held her priceless gift, and yet she rejoiced—O, how she rejoiced!

There was no smallest cloudlet in her sky today. She had made her sacrifice and saved the father whom she owed those long years of devoted care. And lo! in the hour when she had been prepared to give payment for a debt the sacrifice was not asked of her. It was a mistake—a gigantic mistake to have believed that Robert Vennerton cared for her—as Jim Wilslake cared.

Her father's blessing rang in Muriel's ears, her father's kisses were warm upon her lips as the girl went out into the sunshine of that good, glad day, and laughed with the laughing breezes that rioted about her. She was free! free! free! And it would be Robert Vennerton to go away—Jim Wilslake who must stay. It would be the most supreme moment of her life to tell her lover that news—and she was going to it now.

. . . .

"Why do you laugh?" asked Muriel, and surely it was the most perverse imp of feminine vanity that prompted the question. "Are you so glad to be going away?"

He had come to say good-by, the man who had been so much and might have been yet more in her life had he chosen.

But he had not chosen. How glad Muriel was for that. How thankful that she had read his heart wrongly. Such a strange mistake, too, for a woman to make!

And—and now—seeing him standing big and strong before her, with something dominant in his gay personality, she felt urged by that perverse contrariness to probe, seeking to discover how far she had been wrong—how much he had cared at all.

But he laughed again in answer to her question, a triumphant laugh such as the man who wins may laugh, but surely not as a loser. She read the challenge of conquest into the mirth, though she could not read his eyes.

"What does it mean?" asked Muriel inconsequently, and she felt of a sudden that her hand was on a locked door. "When you laugh like that one might think you had won all—everything you wanted in the world."

His gray eyes fixed on her blue ones gleamed very brightly. His grip upon her fingers tightened.

"Right," said Robert Vennerton, "it's the very reason," and the laughter bubbled about his lips.

"The reason?" echoed Muriel. "Then you have won; you have conquered your world?"

"More," replied the man. "Myself."

He loosed her hands as he spoke, leaving her there to puzzle over the enigma of that reply, but he never returned to tell her the true answer.

In after years Muriel Wilslake wondered whether she had learned the truth concerning a mistake she once was taught that she had made, and the gay enigma of an answer to her question, but that was when the jester had gone down into the great silence, where all laughter is hushed.

And in the twilight of those years a woman shed a tear for the man who had called sacrifice a jest.

French Lessons for the Boys Who are going "Over There"

TO THE DINING ROOM

A Series of Twelve Lessons That Gives a Vocabulary of 1,800 Words With Correct Phonetic Pronunciation.

AT THE TABLE

SIXTH LESSON

In Grove's conversational French (copyright 1918 by W. Scott Grove, Scranton, Pa.).

One lesson will appear each week.

By memorizing each lesson as it appears, correct expressions will be learned.

The conversation should be repeated with companions who are interested in the course.

"Study aloud to train eye, ear and tongue together," suggests the author of the course.

"And save each lesson of the series for practice and reference."

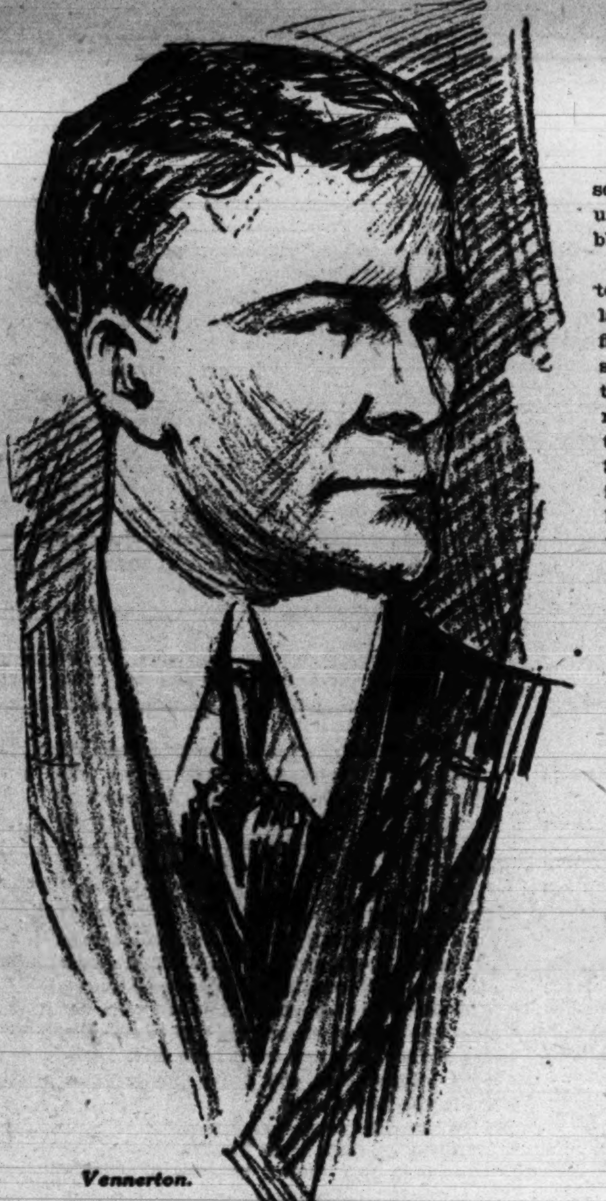
The Great Jest

by May Wynne



Vennerton.

She Never Knew Why He Laughed.

"HOW you laugh," said Muriel. "I—I wish you wouldn't. Is everything a jest with you?"

The man she spoke to laughed again—then grew grave, bending forward to look at her.

She was worth looking at, tall, slim, fair skinned, with soft brown hair which framed a lovely face. But it was not quite the face of a girl who has just attained her heart's desire; not quite the right expression for the face of one who has just accepted the man she loves.

Yet she had told Robert Vennerton that this was so. She had deliberately accepted him for her husband, had submitted to his kisses, and then drawn back in her chair as though, having passed through some ordeal, she desired to rest.

She was engaged to be married to one of the greatest financial "catches" of the season. Not a friend of her acquaintance but would be jealous of her. The subjection of such a man was a triumph to any woman. And yet Muriel Laythorpe felt no thrill either of pride or joy. The crisis of her life left her cold, inert, in a mood to be jarred by the least trifle, such as the glad, gay laugh of a man who had won his desire.

Yes, even if, for a second, Vennerton doubted this, the doubt soon passed. The glamour of his own passion was flung about this woman—who was to him no longer as her fellows, but set on a niche far above them. And she had said she loved him—desired to be his wife. Her troubled, breathless manner he had ascribed to shyness, natural timidity. But it was different when she resented his laughter. For a moment then he wondered whether the last hour had been a dream from which he would awaken far from his goal.

The moment passed—for Robert Vennerton was no dreamer, but a chief actor in the drama of life. Nature herself had designed him for the part when she gave him that big, spare frame, broad shoulders fitted for the battle, and the strong face with its resolute jaw, roughly hewn features, and keen gray eyes. It was just a whim of nature that this favorite of hers should be no dour, gray lynx going on his way with eyes only for the prey. He could laugh, aye! and did so very often. Clear, triumphant laughter that bubbled forth from a glad heart.

It was good, people said, to hear Robert Vennerton laugh. His newly won fiancée had been first to resent it. The man gave up the attempt to solve the enigma of her mood. Probably there was no enigma at all. She was overtired, poor darling, and unnerved—as he had been so near to feeling when first he led her to this conservatory.

So, when she rose, saying she would be glad to slip away to bed, he rose, too, not attempting to protest. Yet, as she stood there, uncertain and shy, he put his arms around her and drew her to his embrace.

"I love you," he whispered "Little girl, will you ever mean all that I do when you repeat those words? I don't think it is possible."

His deep voice shook with emotion. But to his surprise the blue eyes into which he gazed suddenly filled with tears, and Muriel hid her face against his shoulder as she fell a-sobbing.

Yet it was only that she was tired—she confessed. Only that she was afraid he—he might be right.

The explanation was quite incoherent, nor could Vennerton attempt the solution. He only held her very fast and felt that there was nothing in all the world he would not do to save her from real tears and heartache. Nothing he would not do for her happiness.

It so happened that Robert Vennerton had never fallen in love before—and, being generous by nature, was ready to give too much—even his own soul.

But tonight no such price had been asked of him. He had won all he asked—even the woman's love in return for his. No wonder that, as Muriel crept alone along the wide corridor to her room, the echo of triumphant laughter followed her.

Again she shuddered, clasping her hands, as she turned aside, and went down another passage, opening the door of a room and going softly in.

A man sat writing at a table, a gray haired man who wrote wearily One of life's losers, you would have guessed and the guess would have been true enough. He looked up as Muriel entered, and a curious expression crept into his eyes. He dreaded yet longed for the news she was likely to bring.

The girl came a-tip-toe behind him, standing so that he could not see her face, though her hands rested on his shoulders.

"Father," she said, "I am engaged to be married to Robert."

A sigh broke from the father's lips, it sounded like a thanksgiving for release from some dread weight.

The pause that followed was long. Then the man spoke.

"Child," he urged, "let me look in your eyes—and ask what this means to you?"

She snatched back her hands.

"Not tonight—no, not tonight," she moaned, "I—I am so tired—so stupid."

Then she fled, leaving her father to sit, pen in hand, but no longer able to write—he had so much to think of. Later, Vennerton found him, there in his room, and the two talked till the gray morning light stole in through the open windows.

. . . .

How good is life in summer time when roses bloom, birds sing, and all the happy, sunny days drift by to the accompaniment of droning bees, the plash of fountains, and the perfect content of those who have won their land of promise!

That was the view Robert Vennerton took of life those days. Love and laughter filled every summer's day—and soon both would be consummated on that greatest day of all when Muriel became his. His very own—the perfect prize without whom all else was valueless.

If he felt vague disappointment because his lady love proved shy and unresponsive, he named her aloofness as girlish diffidence. He was so sure that he was the first to claim her heart that he never asked the question. His own love cast its reflection upon hers and thus deception was easy—for both.

The nightingales sang with an occasional jarring note in what once had been springtime's perfect melody. But the moonlight cast its white radiance as softly as ever over a dreaming scene.

How strange the old world looked in such a glamour!

Robert laughed to himself in sheer delight that the stern business aspect of life had not stolen from him the poetry and romance of dreams.

It was easy to dream tonight—in that magic world; and all his dreams were one.

Then, as he paused on a narrow path which led down into a quaintly wild ravine, he heard a voice.

It was Muriel who spoke, though the listener had never heard that poignant ring of anguish and pleading before.

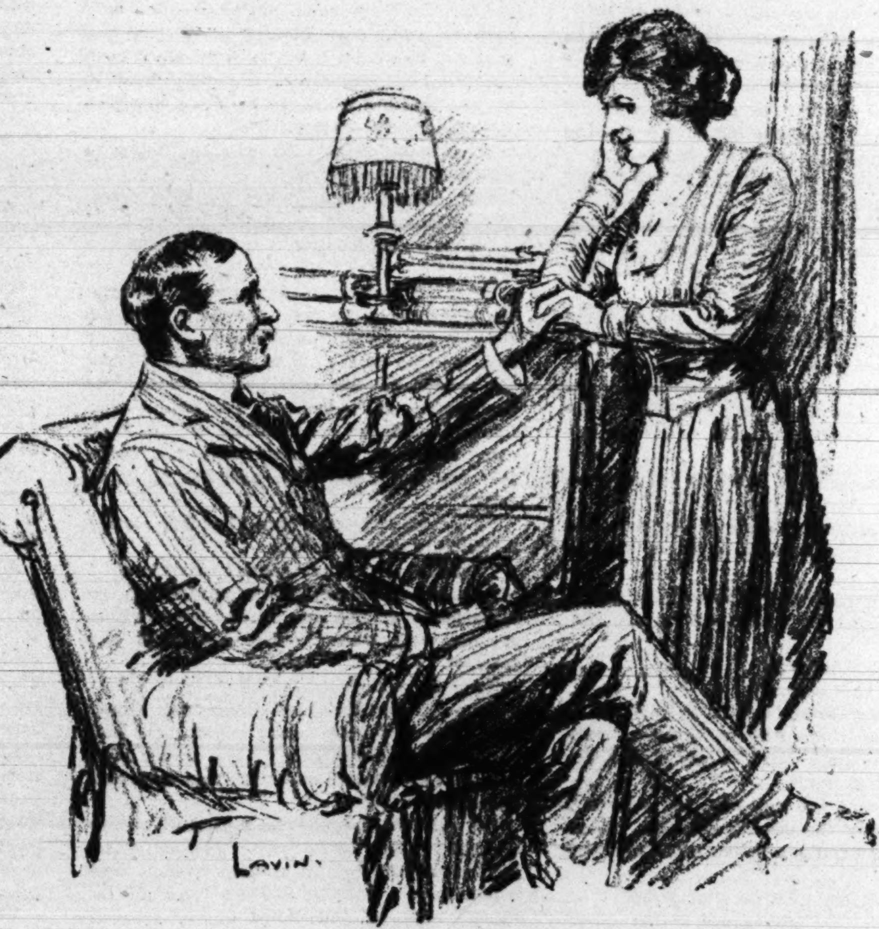
"O, Jim," she was saying, "Jim—won't you understand?"

Here was a moment of crisis for Robert Vennerton, who stood on the edge of his enchanted garden and saw a gray wilderness beyond.

Should he turn away, shaming to play the eavesdropper, or was it only right he, too, should—understand? It was the harder part to remain—and the man remained.

There were two down there under the shadowing acacia. One was his fiancée, the other a man he had met the day before in the town and had been introduced by Muriel's father. A handsome, stern eyed youngster of five and twenty, with life before him and his way all to make.

Vennerton had marked his new acquaintance as a fighter in life's battle, and had liked him, though Wilslake had shown no desire to improve his acquaintance.



"There were tears in the blue eyes, an overflowing of joy which heralded this moment of freedom from self-imposed bonds."

Was the explanation for that shunning here?

"Don't be cruel, Jim," pleaded Muriel again, and there was something very pitiful in the words. "I couldn't have done otherwise! Trust me, Jim."

Then the other spoke.

"Trust you," said the lad with all the intolerance of suffering youth, "how can I? You love me. No, Muriel, though you turn away, you can't deny it. You love me with all your heart—and yet you have engaged yourself to this Robert Vennerton, the American millionaire. You are going to marry a man for his money. O, Muriel—and I love you!"

The last words came as an appeal which few women could have resisted. But Muriel had her answer.

"Listen, Jim, you must, because—this is good-by. But you shall not go away and think of me like that. It—it is true I am going to marry Robert Vennerton. Six weeks ago I promised that. It—it was a time when father was making himself ill with anxiety. The firm—his firm—was on the verge of bankruptcy. It meant ruin. Just absolute ruin and he—he could not have survived it. His heart is wrong. I knew the worry was killing him. Ruin would have struck him a fatal blow.

"Jim, we were boy and girl together. You—you know what father has been to me Father and mother in one. The most loving—most tender. O, you don't know how I ached to know what to do to help. Then I found out. It was a temporary loan the firm needed. A big loan on an easy interest Robert Vennerton is a millionaire. I—I knew father thought of it, but he would not influence me. Only—his eyes were eager—every time Robert came. So that was how it happened. We became engaged. Robert advanced the loan—the firm is saved. Father is just a changed man. He is in no fear of ruin now. His ship is launched in safe waters, he says—and he—he is happy."

"At a price."

"Jim—Jim—you do understand?"

"My darling—yes."

"And—you don't blame me?"

"Blame you? Muriel, Muriel, how could I have an unkind thought of you? My Muriel."

"Hush, hush. It isn't right, Jim. No—you—mustn't kiss me. I belong—to Robert."

"Not yet. Not yet. Look at me, Muriel. Does he guess the truth? Has he bought you—knowing why?"

"Jim—don't be so harsh. He is good, too good for me. I don't love him. I can't—because all my love is yours. But he doesn't guess it. I—don't think he understands girls well. He just—takes their word."

"And you said you loved him?"

"I had to—Jim. To save father."

"Muriel, Muriel—it can't be right. You are mine—not his."

"I am his. He has paid the price, Jim. It is—a debt. And he trusts me. I won't fail him. He is good and kind—so good, so kind. I'll keep faith with Robert. Now we must say—good-by."

And behind every word echoed a pain, which only one of her listeners understood—the man she did not love.

But Jim Wilslake realized enough to hold importunous pleading in check.

This was no mere bartering of a woman's soul for the sordid covetousness of wealth. Love had been the motive of all the tangle and pain. Love!

"It is very hard," said Jim, "for you, lit-

"Come in," she broke off her song to call, looking over her blue aproned shoulder at the door."

to speak to me any more than before, and when I make screens and things you can come and roar just as loudly in the halls!" She looked at him with a little girl sauciness, swinging a restive foot. "The status quo," she added, her face tilted, its fugitive foreshortened lines touched with a gamin-like malice, "is undisturbed."

"So you do bear grudges, after all!" he commented, with unexpected amusement.

"Not grudges—recollections."

"That bear that walks like a man?"

"Still you were very human—once," in justice she recalled. "Last week when I had a telegram and you asked if it were bad news."

"You didn't seem to know"

"Your sympathy upset me."

She had stirred him, at any rate, out of the slough of his inarticulate gratitude. He seemed to be enjoying the saucy clash.

She went on quickly, "But I, shall insist, however, upon being friends with Peggy. And now do tell me about her. Does she go to a school here? Or is she too young?"

And about Peggy, it seemed, once the stream of his speech were thawed, he was pathetically eager to talk. For the child was a problem. In the mornings she went to a little kindergarten kept by French ladies for similarly detached French and American children, and she had her luncheons there before the bus returned her, but the afternoons were difficult now that she was old enough to resent excursions with a bonne. She had few playmates and she was too young for more school.

"She ought to be out of doors," Katherine declared.

He nodded. "I know," he said rather humbly. "And I do knock off every day or so and take her out, but when I'm working—you know how that is?" His appeal recognized her as a fellow worker and she felt gravely flattered.

"Usually she amuses herself in the studio when I'm busy. She's got her paints and her paper dolls—she's a self-sufficient child And of course, we have each other. But lately I've realized she ought to have more of a young life of her own——"

He was walking up and down the studio, now, his hands under his baggy blouse, deep in his trousers' pockets.

Katherine mused a moment. "I suppose there aren't any relatives you could bring over—?" she threw out.

"O God, no! Relatives!" He gave a stare of horror. "Fancy having relatives around—some woman." He jerked a hand free and ran his fingers through his thick hair.

"Never mind, you needn't have one," said Katherine hastily. "Why not just get some nice girl to take her out afternoons—say four a week—to play in the gardens?"

"I've tried. But it's not so easy to find the right ones. Peg's hated most of them—and when she hasn't I have." He stopped for a moment's silent recollection of certain obstructive memories. "Do you know of anybody?" he demanded. "I'd rather have an American than a Frenchwoman, because of the language. Peg knows more French than English now."

"I might hear of somebody at the club," Katherine reflected. "There are lots of nice students who are glad to earn a little extra money—and in such a pleasant way. I'll find out."

"That would be good of you," he said abruptly. He seemed to have a fundamental masculine helplessness toward some of the practicalities of life, and she suspected that the skillful ways she had witnessed in his caring for the child had come rather hard to his slow unhandiness. Mentally she took him and his baby under her untried wing.

"I'll find you a splendid somebody," she promised with an infectious smile. "And sometimes, perhaps, you'll let me borrow her for some out of door hours? You see, I haven't forgotten how I used to look after my small brothers. And it will keep me from getting too homesick."

"Homesick?" he said with a sudden frowning scrutiny of her bright face. A little quizzical gleam came into his dark eyes and he was about to speak when a knock sounded and he turned toward the door as Katherine moved to open it.

"O—good-by," said the Surly Man abruptly. "I hope I haven't kept you," he muttered, plunging toward the door and ignoring the polite salute of the young man who stood aside to let him pass.

In the shadow spangled restaurant of the Bois, where violins wailed, and the velvet shod waters came and went like genii, the light of the pink shaded candles lay like a blush of pleasure on the little table. Between the pink candle shades the girl's face shone to Jeffrey Edgerton like a rose tipped with sunshine. Happiness was dancing on her eyes and lips.

In her youthful white frock, with its mild display of her slender throat, she seemed enchanting to him. His memories of the boat had always been of the out of doors, of blowing hair and wind flushed cheeks and jaunty, boyish coats. Now in the sophistication of this Paris restaurant she had taken on new grace and dignity and her charm was more feminine and more alluring. The intimacy of the little meal à deux had woven its spell. Being fanciful, he thought it was like having a nymph of spring opposite one, and being in love, he thought, "How jolly to have her always like that at table!"

Unconsciously he was grateful to her for being all that he had dreamed. It had not been a simple thing to do—this dashing off for such a pursuing sort of visit. He was tremendously aware, even in the winged rush of his attraction, of all the implications and the weight of things involved. He knew that he was taking what he very seriously called a "decisive step." And he might be taking it toward a possible misadventure, an awkwardness, a disappointment. Suppose she were not all that his fancy had pictured her! He had faced that contingency clear eyedly in crossing, but he had forgotten it utterly at the first sound of her light, approaching feet. And now they had had Saturday dinner together and Sunday luncheon and Sunday tea, and this was Sunday dinner and in a few brief hours it would all be over and he would be taking his way back to England and his post.

But he was too happy now to feel the wrench of that. He was so proud of her, so openly glad at being with her, that this seemed the only reality in the world.

He wondered about her. Was it possible that this visit could mean as much to her as to him? But was it possible that he could misread the bright candor of those eyes? It seemed to him that she was surely coming with him down the same spring enchanted way—otherwise—why, otherwise, life would be too cruel, too bitter. And Jeffrey Edgerton had youth's glad confidence in its own conquering destiny.

Almost, being impetuous and a lover, he was tempted to put some decisive speech to her now, but the leash of common sense still held. He knew that it was too soon. Dimly, without in the least analyzing it, certain reticences of hers, certain fleet intangible withdrawals before too pressing a moment, had made him aware that precipitation would commit himself to her uncertainties.

Even in love he had kept his head. A committed lover is less interesting. Besides, a restaurant was not the place.

A little silence had fallen upon them. In the hours that had just been passed together there had not been many silences; with the eager freshness of children they had been busied remaking each other's acquaintance.

They had laughed away the first, fleet constraint of meeting. And her secret anxieties as to what to do with him those many hours, her guileless plans and decisions, had been wasted, for Jeffrey knew his Paris and had his own plans of pleasant authority. There had been a late dinner Saturday, and a rambling stroll through favorite streets where the lamps winked up at them from the smooth Seine; there had been that day a motor to Versailles and a glimmering noon of April brightness, of playing fountains and holiday crowds; there had been a fleet dash back to town, and then tea in her studio as she had planned, and then—after an interval for rest and dress—this last dinner.

And in all that time, in all that strenuous youthful dose of each other's society, not one moment but of deepening pleasure. That was the young miracle of it. Their talk had ranged with the freedom and easy interest of youth; she had given him gay accounts of the académie, of her acquaintances there, of the club with the pleasant girls, of her studio and her encounters with the Surly Man. She narrated with becoming lightness the adventure of the croup and was not ill disposed to the admiration which it evoked in her devoted listener. That the notion which Edgerton received from her droll sketch of her neighbor was that of a crabbed and slightly elderly man, was not, of course, to be attributed to her intention. She did not really think of him as young.

And Edgerton, in his turn, had his narrations. He had brought one or two snapshots to supplement them of his quarters, his fellow officers, and of his country home. The pictures gave only glimpses of Edgerton hall, drolly foreshortened, but they were glimpses of a lovely house front, overhung with ivy, of an old tower, casement windowed, and of gardens sloping to a river, their walks flanked by old fashioned flowers.

"It's not much of a place," had said Jeffrey modestly, "but it's very jolly. And the gardens are great. To me they're the sweetest spot in England."

"They look lovely," Katherine had given back, rather shyly.

"I thought I had a good one of the rose garden, but Fred, the scamp, had secretly taken his pony on that film and forgotten to wind it. You'd like the rose garden. It has a wall about it and a gate and a jolly old sun dial in the center. Mother loves it. She's famous for her roses."

"So is my mother," Katherine had answered with a sudden laugh of whimsical amusement. "But she hasn't any rose garden and wall and sun dial—just a little side yard and an arbor—but she has the most wonderful crimson rambler over it in town! And there's a Dorothy Perkins on the porch that has figured in many a number of seed catalogues!"

"I know it's charming," Edgerton had instantly agreed.

She had shaken her head at him drolly, "O, no, you wouldn't think it, really! For we haven't any park about us, and any sheep in the meadows and deer in the woods! And our neighbors on one side are so near that we look in each other's dining room windows and in summer we can hear everything. It's too bad that all you know of America is an estate on the Hudson. You can't picture the rest of us at all."

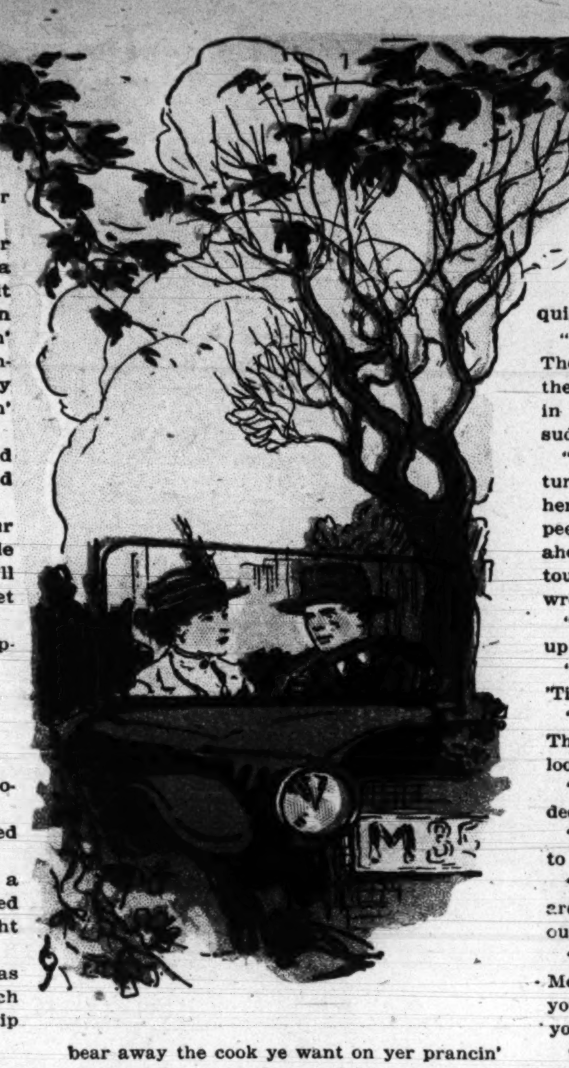
The Little White Hin



by Margaret Cameron

There Was a Dinner Party On and No Cook to Be Had.

THE tall, clean shaven, flannel clad man standing on the Fletchers' veranda wiped the perspiration from his face and rang again. When he had rung three times without eliciting any response he returned to the touring car in which he had come and was about to step into it when his attention was attracted by a flutter of white behind a hedge near the back of the house; and he strolled around to investigate it. Outwardly he was an ordinary sort of conventional, well dressed young man, with nothing to distinguish him from others of his class.

He found a maid hanging out some filmy blouses, which evidently she had just washed. She wore no collar, her waist was turned in at the neck, her sleeves were rolled up almost to the shoulder, and there were wet spots on her checked gingham apron. There was also a smootch on one side of her saucy nose, but she was nevertheless a very pretty girl, of which the man, after the manner of his kind, was instantly aware. He regarded her appreciatively a moment before he spoke. Then said he, tentatively:

"Good morning."

The young woman turned quickly, still holding in place the garment she was hanging, and stared at him with startled, black lashed, blue gray eyes. The man waited, but she did not speak, so he began again.

"I rang—three times—but no one came." She averted her glance; and he added quickly, almost apologetically, "Of course you couldn't be expected to hear a bell out here," although he knew that he had heard it distinctly from the front veranda.

"No," said the girl. "Of course not."

"Mrs. Fletcher is not at home?"

"No—sir." There was the slightest possible pause between the words, and as the man noticed this he looked at her a little more attentively.

"O—indeed?" he considered. "And—Miss Powell?"

"Miss Pow'll—sure she's gon' out, too." She thrust a final clothespin over the blouse she had been holding and came toward him, speaking with a rich brogue. "The both av thim's gon' out."

"O—really?" remarked the man. She glanced keenly at him, but his smile, although encouraging, seemed wholly ingenuous. "I am unfortunate. Will they be out long, do you know?"

"Sure, that's as it may be, but I'm thinkin' they'll not be back before lunch, which is at wan. Will ye be waitin'?"

"No—no, certainly I can't wait that long."

"Faith, they'll not be comin' back soon, fer Mrs. Fletcher wint off in the ottimobile, and Miss Pow'll's gon' fer a long walk."

"For a walk!" marveled the man, again wiping the perspiration from his face.

"Sure, 'tis hersilf's the great walker," she rather hastily explained. "Hot or cold, rain or shine, 'tis all wan to her. She must be walkin' some part o' the day. An' this mornin' says she to me, 'I'm off fer a long walk, Molly,' says she. Thim was her very worrds. 'I'm off fer a long walk,' says she. An' Mrs. Fletcher tuk Mary an' the baby wid her, an' Annie's away sick, an' 'tis Norah's day off, an' so I'm here by mesilf intirely. That's how ye didn't get in."

"I see."

"But av ye're a fr'ind o' theirs, sure they'll be that sorry to be missin' ye! 'Tis dull enough they are here!"

"O, I'm not a friend of theirs. I have never had the honor of meeting either of them, and I have never even seen Miss Powell—but once."

"But ye have seen her, thin?" demanded the young woman, her eyes widening a little.

"Yes," quietly; "she was pointed out to me once in New York. Miss Roberta Powell is getting to be rather a famous novelist, and many people whom she never heard of know her by sight."

"Humph!" ejaculated his companion. "'Tis little she'd thank thim fer the likes o' that! So ye niver saw her but the wance?"

"No; but I remember her quite distinctly." Just the right shade of indolent interest tingled his deliberate speech. "She's very large and has a great deal of red—at least, auburn hair."

"She has not!" indignantly contended the girl. "She's a little wan, an' her hair's brown."

"Really? Then I must have looked at the wrong person. It was in a crowd. I quite thought she was a big woman with red hair. However, though I have evidently never seen her, I hope to have that pleasure very soon. I have here a note for Mrs. Fletcher from Mrs. Dinsmore, with whom I am staying."

"O! That's who ye are, is it?" she reflected, a queer little gleam creeping into her eye. "Ye're from Mrs. Dinsmore's."

"I was to take back the answer, because Mrs. Dinsmore's telephone is out of order; but, since the ladies are not here, perhaps I can arrange to come back after lunch for the reply."

"Don't ye give yersilf that trouble, sor. Sure, William, the chaufurr, can take it over whin they do be comin' back."

"O, very well. You'll not forget to give the note to Mrs. Fletcher as soon as she comes in? It's very important."

"'Dade, I'll not forgit. But how did ye iver find out that Miss Pow'll was here at all, at all? Sure, 'tis the great secret!"

"A secret, is it? Why?"

"Ah, sure, she's that tired o' feastin' an' fêt'in' she can scarce abide the sight o' food or drink; an' as fer min——" She clapped her hands and turned aside her head in a typically Irish gesture.

"You seem to be in Miss Powell's confidence," he suggested, with that same encouraging, ingenuous smile.

"In her confidince, is it? An' why not, I'd like to know? Sure, 'tis her own maid I am."

"O, are you a lady's maid?"

"I am," said she, dimpling. "Wud ye be takin' me fer the cook? Though, by the same token, 'tisn't as if I cudn't."

"Couldn't what?"

"Cook."

"Can you?"

"I can that! Whin there's no timptin' Miss Pow'll's appetite anny other way 'tis mesilf can always do it; though 'tis sildom indade," tossing her head, "that I sile me fingers wid it."

"I see." The man's face was quite grave, but the corners of his eyes wrinkled with amusement. "And—have you been with Miss Powell long?"

"Always. I mane," quickly, "iver since I wint out to service at all, at all. An', by the same token, I'm the only maid she iver had. Sure, 'tis only mesilf can do annything to plaze her, even to the washin' of her blooses." She glanced back at the clotheslines. "We suit wan another per-fect-ly."

"That's fortunate, isn't it?" He was smiling again now. "But Miss Powell is tired, you say? Particularly of men?"

"Ah!" Again the gesture. "An' most particularly o' thim that writes." She stole a mischievous, upward glance at him. "'Molly,' says she to me, 'Molly, do ye niver marry a scribblin' man,' says she. 'There's plinty o' rale min in the worrld,' says she, 'an' av there's not ye'd far better die single,' says she."

At this he laughed outright, and then, regarding her quizzically, continued:

"But she writes herself."

"To be sure she does. By the same token, she trims her own hats an' wears bracelets, but she'd not be carin' greatly fer the man that did."

"Ah! Then she considers literature properly a purely feminine pursuit, does she?"

"Not literature—popular ficshun. She has the greatest rispict—manny's the time I've heard her say it—the greatest rispict fer min that writes rale books. 'But hivin defend me,' says she, 'from the male persons that goes about to afternoon teas and preens thimsilves in the light of a bist siller,' says she."

"I see—your point. But there are degrees, even among men who—write best sellers." His lips twisted whimsically. "For example, there are Tracey Coats and Earl Bryant. Surely nobody could see any similarity between them. And Robert King and George Dean Shearer and Sheldon Wells——"

"An' all as like as canned Frinch peas, Miss Pow'll says. 'Wan may be a bit smaller or softer than another,' says she, 'but they're all preserved by the same process,' says she, 'an' they're all the same unhealthy shade o' green.'"

"Then there's—Forbes Myrick." He seemed to hesitate a little at the name, and a new, inscrutable quality came into his smile as he watched her.

"O, Mr. Forbes Myrick! Him!"

"But Miss Powell doesn't know Mr. Myrick."

"How do ye know that?" she instantly demanded.

"Because," slowly, "Mr. Myrick happens to be staying at Mrs. Dinsmore's now, and I heard him say this morning that he had never met Miss Powell."

"Aha! So that's the milk in the cocoanut!" she cried. "Mrs. Dinsmore's got a bist siller stayin' wid her, an' Mrs. Fletcher, not to be outdone, betrays the fact that she's got wan, too. An' the nixt move is a dinner party to get the two o' thim togither!" She flipped scornful fingers against the note she held.

"Well! Does Miss Powell object to dinner parties, too?"

"O, not to say objict—whin she's ast fer hersilf alone, as ye might say. 'But whin a pullet is possissed of a divil that makes it lay eggs in the market place an' cackle in public,' says she, ''tis small r'ason fer pokin' it up on a pidestal and pertindin' 'tis an inspired seraphim,' says she. 'Particularly whin itself knows all the time 'tis nothin' but a little white hin,' says she."

The man laughed again, and she joined him merrily, the while they covertly watched each other.

"Well, I must be going," he said. "Your Miss Powell must be a very remarkable woman, from all you tell me. I hope she'll come to that dinner. I should like to meet her."

"Wud ye so?" she asked, with another upflung, humorous glance.

"I would indeed," gravely.

"An' are ye to be there?"

"I hope to be."

"Thin ye'll meet her—av she's there."

"So I will." Once more they laughed together. "Well, good morning, Molly."

"Ah, sure, they'll be askin' me who called wid the message, sor," she coaxed.

"O, will they? Tell them," he paused a moment, smiling down at her, and continued very deliberately, "tell them it was brought by—Mr. Trowbridge."

If surprise swept across her face it was instantly replaced by a roguish gleam, which was still in her eye as she asked, grave of lip and innocently inquiring:

"Trowbridge?"

"Trowbridge. You'll not forget to give Mrs. Fletcher the note as soon as she comes in?"

"No, Mr. Tro-owbridge," with an indescribable little drawl, "I'll not be forgittin'—annything."

"Thank you, Molly. Good morning."

About 4 o'clock the next afternoon the same man in the same car was whizzing along a shady stretch of road, a mile or so from the Fletchers', but he was no longer smiling. He frowned instead, and sat hunched in his seat behind the wheel, staring moodily ahead, absorbed and unseeing. Because of this preoccupation he nearly passed without noticing a young woman who walked by the side of the road; but he caught a glimpse of her profile just in time to recognize it, and a moment later he had checked and turned the big machine and was slowly and much more cheerfully trundling back to meet her.

"An' av it ain't Mr. Tro-owbridge!" she exclaimed, as he sprang from the car. "Sure, I'd niver 've knowed ye, sor, in thim goggles. Ye must have been breakin' the speed limits to nade thim things on a day like this."

"I have," said he. "I've been chasing wild geese all over the country-side."

"An' di ye catch anny, sor?"

"I did not."

She laughed and drew nearer him, lowering her voice confidentially.

"Faith, ye shud put salt on their tails. Thin the'll ate out o' yer hand."

"Humph! Is there anything that will have that effect on a woman, Molly?"

"An' is it a woman ye're after? Ah, that's another pair o' shoes intirely! Sure, 'tis not fer the likes o' me to be tellin' a fine gintleman how to do that!"

"Probably you know a lot more about it than I do, Molly. How's Miss Powell?"

"That ye'll soon be seein' fer yersilf, Mr. Tro-owbridge." Her slight drawl always subtly emphasized his name. "She do be goin' to the dinner party."

"Humph! I wonder if she is? You don't happen to know of an available and competent cook, do you, Molly?"

"Cook?"

"Mrs. Dinsmore's woman received a telegram at noon saying her father had been hurt and was dying, and she's gone; and unless we can find somebody to take her place there won't be any dinner. That's what I've been chasing—a cook."

"An' y' ain't got anny?" she half whispered, wide eyed.

"I neglected to supply myself with salt," he dryly returned.

"How manny has she comin' the night?"

"I don't know. About ten, besides the house party, I think."

"Ah, the poor soul!" She meditatively poked the dust with her toe for a moment, and then looked up at him with a daring glint. "'Tis a pity min has no invintion nowadays."

"Invention?"

"Av ye was wan o' thim knights yer fri'nd Mr. Forbes Myrick writes so much about ye wudn't be wastin' times like this, Mr. Tro-owbridge. Ye'd go forth an' raid a castle, an' bear away the cook ye want on yer prancin' steed. Sure, no gintleman o' thim times wud disapp'int a lady fer a mere matter of assault an' batthery."

"Right you are!" he granted, laughing. "But the days of chivalry—as some one has said before, I think—are dead."

"'Twas Miss Pow'll said it," she instantly returned with a droll twinkle.

"I'm afraid Miss Powell is a pessimist," he suggested.

"A pessi—— What's that?"

"A pessimist, Molly, is a person who sits in a flood of bright moonlight and insists that it emanates from a chunk of green cheese."

"Ah, sure, 'tis a pity ye're not a writer yersilf, Mr. Tro-owbridge. That sounds like a book."

"Which brings us back to cooks—and to you," he continued, ignoring her interruption and holding her in an intent, amused, but none the less purposeful gaze.

"How to me?" she demanded, stiffening slightly.

"Because you told me yesterday that you could cook. Now's your time to prove it. You will, won't you?"

"Will what?"

"Prove it. Come over to Mrs. Dinsmore's with me now and cook that dinner."

"'Dade, I will not!" said she.

"O, I think you will," he returned, very quietly.

"All right. Just as you say, of course. I'm sorry." He turned half way and then added, as if by an afterthought, "Get in. I'll take you home."

"Ah, sure, ye're very kind, sor, but 'tis not fer the likes o' me to be ridin' in ottimobiles."

"Except sometimes with the chauffeur, eh, Molly?"

"Faith," tossing her head again, "I lave him to Norah, the sicond girrl. 'Tis not William Hogan n'r the like of him I'd be wastin' me time wid! But ye must be havin' yer jo-oke, Mr. Tro-owbridge!"

"Well, this is no joke. I mean it. I have detained you here talking about this affair of the cook. Now I'll atone for it by making up the lost time for you. Otherwise you'll have to hurry, and it's a hot day. Come, hop in."

"But what'd Miss Pow'll an' Mrs. Fletcher be thinkin' o' me?" she parleyed, obviously hesitating. "Sure, 'tis out o' me place I'd be intirely, ridin' wid a gentleman!"

"I'll make that all right. Get in, please. You see, if there is to be no dinner the guests must be notified; and, since I'm so near, I might as well begin with Mrs. Fletcher and Miss Powell."

"Well—so be ye're goin' there annyway." She allowed herself to be helped into the front seat, twinkling again as she added, "Thin ye'll be meetin' Miss Pow'll, Mr. Tro-owbridge, party or no party."

"I hope so," he replied. "I should like nothing better." As he slipped into his place beside her he glanced at her embroidered linen gown, asking casually, "Dressed up a bit, aren't you, Molly? There is a young man somewhere, then?"

"Ah, sure, there's no lack o' lads, Mr. Tro-owbridge, av I chose to notice thim."

"But you don't?"

"Sure, I do not! As fer the driss, 'twas Miss Pow'll's last summer."

"O, she gives you her old dresses, does she?"

"Sure, 'tis wan o' the purquisites o' me position," she loftily replied.

"I see," said he, putting on more speed. The car gained steadily in velocity, and neither spoke again until they reached a fork in the road, when he swerved sharply and suddenly to the left.

"No! No!" she cried. "'Tis the wrong turn ye tuk!" Apparently he did not hear her, for he bent slightly over the wheel, peering through his goggles at the way ahead without noticing her protest. She touched his arm, calling again, "'Tis the wrong road we're on intirely!"

"What's that, Molly?" he asked, slowing up a little to make talking easier.

"Sure, ye tuk the wrong turn back there! 'Tis not the road to the Fletchers' we're on!"

"No," he composedly admitted! "it is not. This is the road to the Dinsmores'." Then he looked at her and smiled.

"But I'm not goin' to Dinsmores'!" she declared.

"O, yes, you are, Molly! You are going to cook that dinner."

"'Dade, an' I'm not! What manner o' man are ye, annyhow? Stop the car! Let me out o' this!"

"Not at all. Now, don't be frightened, Molly, or foolish. Nobody's going to hurt you. Nothing's going to happen—except that you are going to cook that dinner."

"I suppose 'tis yer idea of a jo-oke, Mr. Tro-owbridge! Sure, 'tis yersilf's the great humorist!"

"If it's a joke, it's yours, not mine," he retorted, unmoved.

"What do ye mane by that?"

"It was a bright suggestion of yours, young woman, that I should raid a castle and carry off a cook. This isn't exactly the 'prancing steed' you recommended, but still—it will serve very well."

"O! So that's yer little game, is it?"

"That's my little game," cheerfully. "In plain words, Molly, you are being kidnaped—for culinary purposes."

"An' ye're thinkin' to plaze Miss Pow'll wid this?" she mocked, instantly catching her breath, as if to recall the words.

"I was thinking," gently, "of my friend Mrs. Dinsmore.

She bit her lip, and a gleam that might have been anger, or inspiration, or suppressed mirth danced in her eye. Presently she spoke again, but cajolingly.

"Ah, sure, Mr. Tro-owbridge, 'tis not fer a gintleman like yersilf to be gettin' a poor girrl into trouble, an' losin' her a good place. Ye've had yer joke—an' I'm not denyin' 'tis a good wan. Let me go now, sor, back to me young lady. Sure, ye said ye'd take me home."

"Mrs. Dinsmore's is home to me at present."

"An' is that what ye mint? An' yersilf a gintleman! Faith, 'tis little better than a lie!"

"O, now, now, Molly! Think! Here is a lady with a lot of guests coming to dinner——"

"An' two bist sillers!"

"And two best sellers."

"Only wan o' thim'll not be there!"

"Neither of them will be there—nobody will be there—there won't be any dinner, unless you help us out."

For a moment she met his gaze squarely, each measuring the other's strength. Then she gave her head a decisive little toss and said:

"Very good, sor. I'll do that same."

"You'll—what?" He seemed rather taken aback by his victory.

"I'll 'play the game,' Mr. Tro-owbridge. An' on yer own hid be all that comes av it!"

"You mean——"

"Sure, I mane just what I say. I'll 'play the game.' I'll hilp ye out." No word can convey the scorn of her manner. "An' I'll wash me hands of annything that comes after."

A mile or two more slipped beneath them, he turning once or twice meanwhile to glance at her quizzically and a little curiously. Finally he broke the silence, saying:

"We're very near the Dinsmore place now."

"Are we so?" in ominous calm from his companion.

"There is still time——"

"O, play the game, Mr. Tro-owbridge! Be a sport an' play the game!"

"O, very well," said he.

"Wan thing, an' wan only, I have to ask o' ye."

"Anything, of course," he murmured, turning in at a gateway.

"I'll ask ye to remimber that, as long as I'm stayin' here, I'm a cook, not a lady's maid."

"Certainly. I found you in the village. But won't your—won't the family be anxious about you if you don't return?"

"Sure, that's part o' the 'game' wid which I have nothin' to do at all, at all. 'Wan must risk something in ivery adventure,' Mr. Tro-owbridge," she taunted, and smiled to see him wince.

A moment later he stopped the car near the back of a pleasant country residence, and she sprang out without waiting for his help.

"I'll find Mrs. Dinsmore and tell her you're here," he suggested.

"Spare yersilf that trouble, Mr. Tro-owbridge. I prefer to meet the madam alone."

"O, very well," he said again, but he sat looking after her until she had disappeared within the house. Then he arched his brows and whistled softly.

Half an hour later young Mrs. Dinsmore sought him where he sat smoking on the veranda.

"Wizard!" she cried. "Where did you get that woman?"

"Is she all right?" he ventured, eying her somewhat apprehensively.

"All right? She's more than that! She's so preternaturally bright and good that I'm perfectly sure this is black magic and that she'll presently disintegrate before my very eyes and disappear in a little whiff of vapor. Where did you find her?"

"O," carelessly, "I picked her up down near the village. Did she—tell you her name?"

"Molly McManus." He took a long, furtive breath and frowned slightly. "But there's certainly some mystery about her. You know, that's altogether too handsome a gown for a girl of her position to be wearing."

"Did you tell her so?" he asked, very quickly.

"She didn't give me the chance. She explained that it was given to her by a woman she worked for in town last year—she's only here for a few days, visiting her sister—and that she had it on today because she'd been out with her 'young man' and didn't want to keep us waiting while she changed, knowing I'd have maid's dresses here."

"And have you?" He was beginning to look decidedly troubled.

"Of course. But that's not the point. There's something queer about that woman."

"Aren't you looking a gift horse in the mouth?"

"Not I!" merrily. "I'm merely savoring the situation to the full. Far be it from me to question anything she wears, or does, or says, as long as she cooks that dinner! And she can do it! She's an adept! I could see that before she'd been in the kitchen ten minutes. All she asked of me was to keep away and leave her a clear field—not 'flooster' her mind, she said—and I'm going to do it."

"I would, if I were you. Let her alone," he moodily recommended.

"I shall. And what greater proof could I give of my entire confidence, considering the importance of the occasion? But why so gloomy now, when you've saved the day for me?"

"Am I gloomy?"

"As a November rain! Cheer up! Cheer up!" She laid both hands on his arm and squeezed it affectionately. "The dinner can't help being a success now with that cook and Roberta Powell!"

"O, can't it, though!" he muttered, as she whirled away. "Damn!" Presently he strolled around to the kitchen window and called softly, "Molly!" There was no response until he had called again, when a flushed and frowning face, surmounted by a white cap, appeared from behind the screen.

"Well, what is it now?" demanded a hushed but exasperated voice.

"Come out here. I want to talk to you a moment."

"Sure, I've no time to palaver, I'm that busy. Go 'way wid ye!"

"Yes, but—see here," he begged, as she turned away, "you mustn't do this! You mustn't cook——"

"A-ah! Scairt, are ye?" jeered his captive, softly. "O, be a sport, Mr. Tro-owbridge! Play the game! Play the game!" With this she disappeared, and he meandered back to the front veranda, kicking the gravel as he went.

The Fletcher party arrived late, and most of the other guests were assembled when they descended to the drawing room. Some one spoke to Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher in the hall, detaining them a moment; but Miss Powell, apparently not noticing the interruption, kept on alone. She was a slender, erect little person, with dark hair, black lashed, blue gray eyes, and a saucy nose, and she wore white chiffon.

Mrs. Dinsmore, espying her, gasped audibly and stood as near agape as a gentlewoman can, staring at her approaching guest of honor, who contracted her brows a hair's breadth and shook her head ever so slightly at the hostess.

"It's all this wretched girl's fault that we're late," cried Grace Fletcher, overtaking her friend. "She went for a walk and got lost—but, of course, you know all about that."

"Yes, she knows all about it," calmly echoed Miss Powell.

Dinsmore hurried up to greet the new arrivals and fell into conversation with the Fletchers, leaving the two women practically alone for the moment.

"Am I asleep or crazy!" whispered one.

"Neither. Be careful!" warned the other, while her seeking glance touched one after another of the company and then hastily sought again.

"Then you are—— But how—— Why—— O, I don't understand!"

"'Sh! Not here!"

"But who, in the name of heaven, is in my kitchen now?"

"Mrs. Howard's cook. A treasure. Don't worry."

"But—I don't know Mrs. Howard!"

"'Sh! Grace does—intimately. It's all right. Grace—doesn't know anything else, however," she finished, lightly, as a man approached.

"Witch!" whispered Mrs. Dinsmore. "Ask and it shall be given thee, to the half of my kingdom! I said it was black magic! Meanwhile, here's Forbes Myrick waiting to meet you."

"I shall be very glad indeed to meet Mr. Forbes Myrick," responded Miss Powell, with a queer little intonation that caused the hostess to glance quickly at her before prompting:

"But this is Mr. Myrick."

He was a very ordinary sort of conventional, well dressed, well mannered young man, tall and clean shaven, with nothing to distinguish him, outwardly, from a hundred others of his class; but as she glanced up at him the gleam in Roberta Powell's eyes faded to bewilderment, every shade of expression was wiped from her face, and she presented a blank mask to the politely smiling gaze of a man she had never seen before.

"O—really?" she faltered to break the silence that fell upon them. "Are you really Forbes Myrick?"

"You are evidently surprised." The man seemed uncertain whether to be offended or flattered.

"I am. At least—I'm not. That is—— O, I am so glad to meet you, Mr. Myrick! Do please forgive me," the phrases came quickly now, between little gusts of gleeful laughter, "but this is too good to be true! It simply couldn't happen! You see, I thought you were somebody else. At least, I thought somebody else was—well, at any rate, I had no idea that you were yourself, and I'm so glad, so very glad that you are!"

Myrick still looked a little bewildered, but here was obviously cause for complacence, so he smiled down upon her and constructed something subtly complimentary in reply. Other people were brought to her and introduced, and through it all she talked and laughed—and watched the doors. The women in the room outnumbered the men by one.

Dinner was announced, and at the same time there entered from the hall a dejected young man. He stopped short in the doorway, seeing her, and a curious expression, compounded of many complex emotions, strengthened in his face as he crossed to where she stood.

Meanwhile Mrs. Dinsmore, looking about the room, had exclaimed:

"Why, where's Peter? He seems to have disappeared. Is it possible he doesn't know—— Peter! O, here you are!" discovering him at her elbow. "Miss Powell, my brother, Mr. Trowbridge. O, I forget! You need no introduction—or do you?" Her laughter gave place to perplexity as she glanced from one to the other. Her brother was regarding the girl with an intent, humorous look, behind which glowed something deeper and warmer, and he seemed to be holding himself in check, as if waiting for his cue, while in Roberta's manner, sparkling and triumphant though it was, lurked a quality as far removed from indifference as it was from welcoming warmth.

"I think I've never had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Trowbridge before," said she, smoothly. "And nobody told me you had a brother, Mrs. Dinsmore."

At that moment Dinsmore came up, offering his arm to Miss Powell, and they led the way to the dining room. Trowbridge was seated midway down the long table, on the same side as Roberta, making conversation between them impossible; and so successfully did she evade him after they returned to the drawing room that it was only when the party was about to break up that he succeeded in cornering her where she could not escape.

"Miss Powell," he began, "skill in untying Gordian knots is part of the necessary equipment of a novelist, and though, as we've never met before, I feel some hesitation in approaching you in this matter, I should like to present a hypothetical problem for your solving."

"Why hypothetical?" she asked.

"John Stuart Mill says there are 'no other limits to hypotheses than those of the human imagination,' and as this case lies clear outside all ordinary boundaries perhaps it can best be presented in hypothesis."

"O," with a shrug, "if you're going to be academic——"

"Very well, then," he retorted. "I was trying to be literary; but, if you don't like that, let's get right down to brass tacks. How did you do it?"

"Quite simply," was the cold reply. "I asked Mrs. Dinsmore to allow me to telephone to my sister, to allay her natural anxiety when I did not return, and, as the telephone was out of order, she very kindly offered to send a note by the chauffeur. I then wrote to Mrs. Fletcher, telling her that I had taken the wrong turn and arrived here, finding Mrs. Dinsmore suddenly bereft of her cook. I asked her to send her own car for Mrs. Howard's cook, who would leave it at the gate here, where it would wait for me. The woman slipped in, I gave her the instructions I had received from Mrs. Dinsmore, slipped out, and drove home. You see, it was very simple."

"When did this woman arrive?"

"About an hour after I did."

"And all this time I have been grilling in torment," he protested, "imagining you out there in that stifling kitchen this sweltering day, just because you wouldn't give in!"

"Imagining me! Then you knew! You didn't know!"

"Know? Of course I knew from the very first minute yesterday morning. Did you think I really meant to coerce a cook? Do you think I normally go about kidnaping Irish girls and chaining them to the wheel? What do you take me for?"

"I took you—for Mr. Forbes Myrick," she admitted, and laughed a little.

"Then—I'm forgiven?" He bent forward to see into her eyes, whereupon she gave him a full view of them, alight and defiant, the while she demanded:

"Does it seem to you so much less a thing to kidnap me and chain me to a wheel?"

"Ah, but you had it in your own hands. Who began this game?"

"O, son of Adam!" she scoffed.

"Apparently Adam had a few daughters, too," he intimated. "By the way, does mechanical engineering impress you as being a man's work? A real man's work?"

"Why?" she parried; but her eyes began to dance.

"Because it happens to be my work, and I want to know."

"Do you always talk shop, Mr. Trowbridge—first mine and then yours?"

"It doesn't seem anything like embroidery or knitting work, does it?" he anxiously persisted.

"Might one suggest that it sounds a little—what shall I say—heavy?"

"Brutal, eh? That's all right!" He took a long breath of exaggerated relief, and she made a little movement as if to step past him. "No, not yet," he said. She looked up to meet the intent, humorous, purposeful gaze she had encountered before; but now it had in it certain lights before which her own glance fell. "Tell me first when I may come to see you."

"Sure, we do be goin' away come Thursday, Mr. Tro-owbridge," was the laughing but slightly unsteady reply. "That's tomorro'."

"Yes, I know. But you remember my jack in the box proclivities. Won't you let me come?"

"That depends—on which of me you would come to see," she lightly evaded, her color a little heightened by the earnestness in his tone. "Choose."

"The novelist is very brilliant," he told her, slowly, "and Molly is utterly bewitching, but of the trinity that is you neither of these is the one that attracts me most. What would you say if I should ask you to show me—the 'little white hin'?" He was smiling, but he finished very softly indeed, and there was a palpitant pause.

"She'll be at Bar Harbor next week," she breathed, in one laughing gasp, and fled.

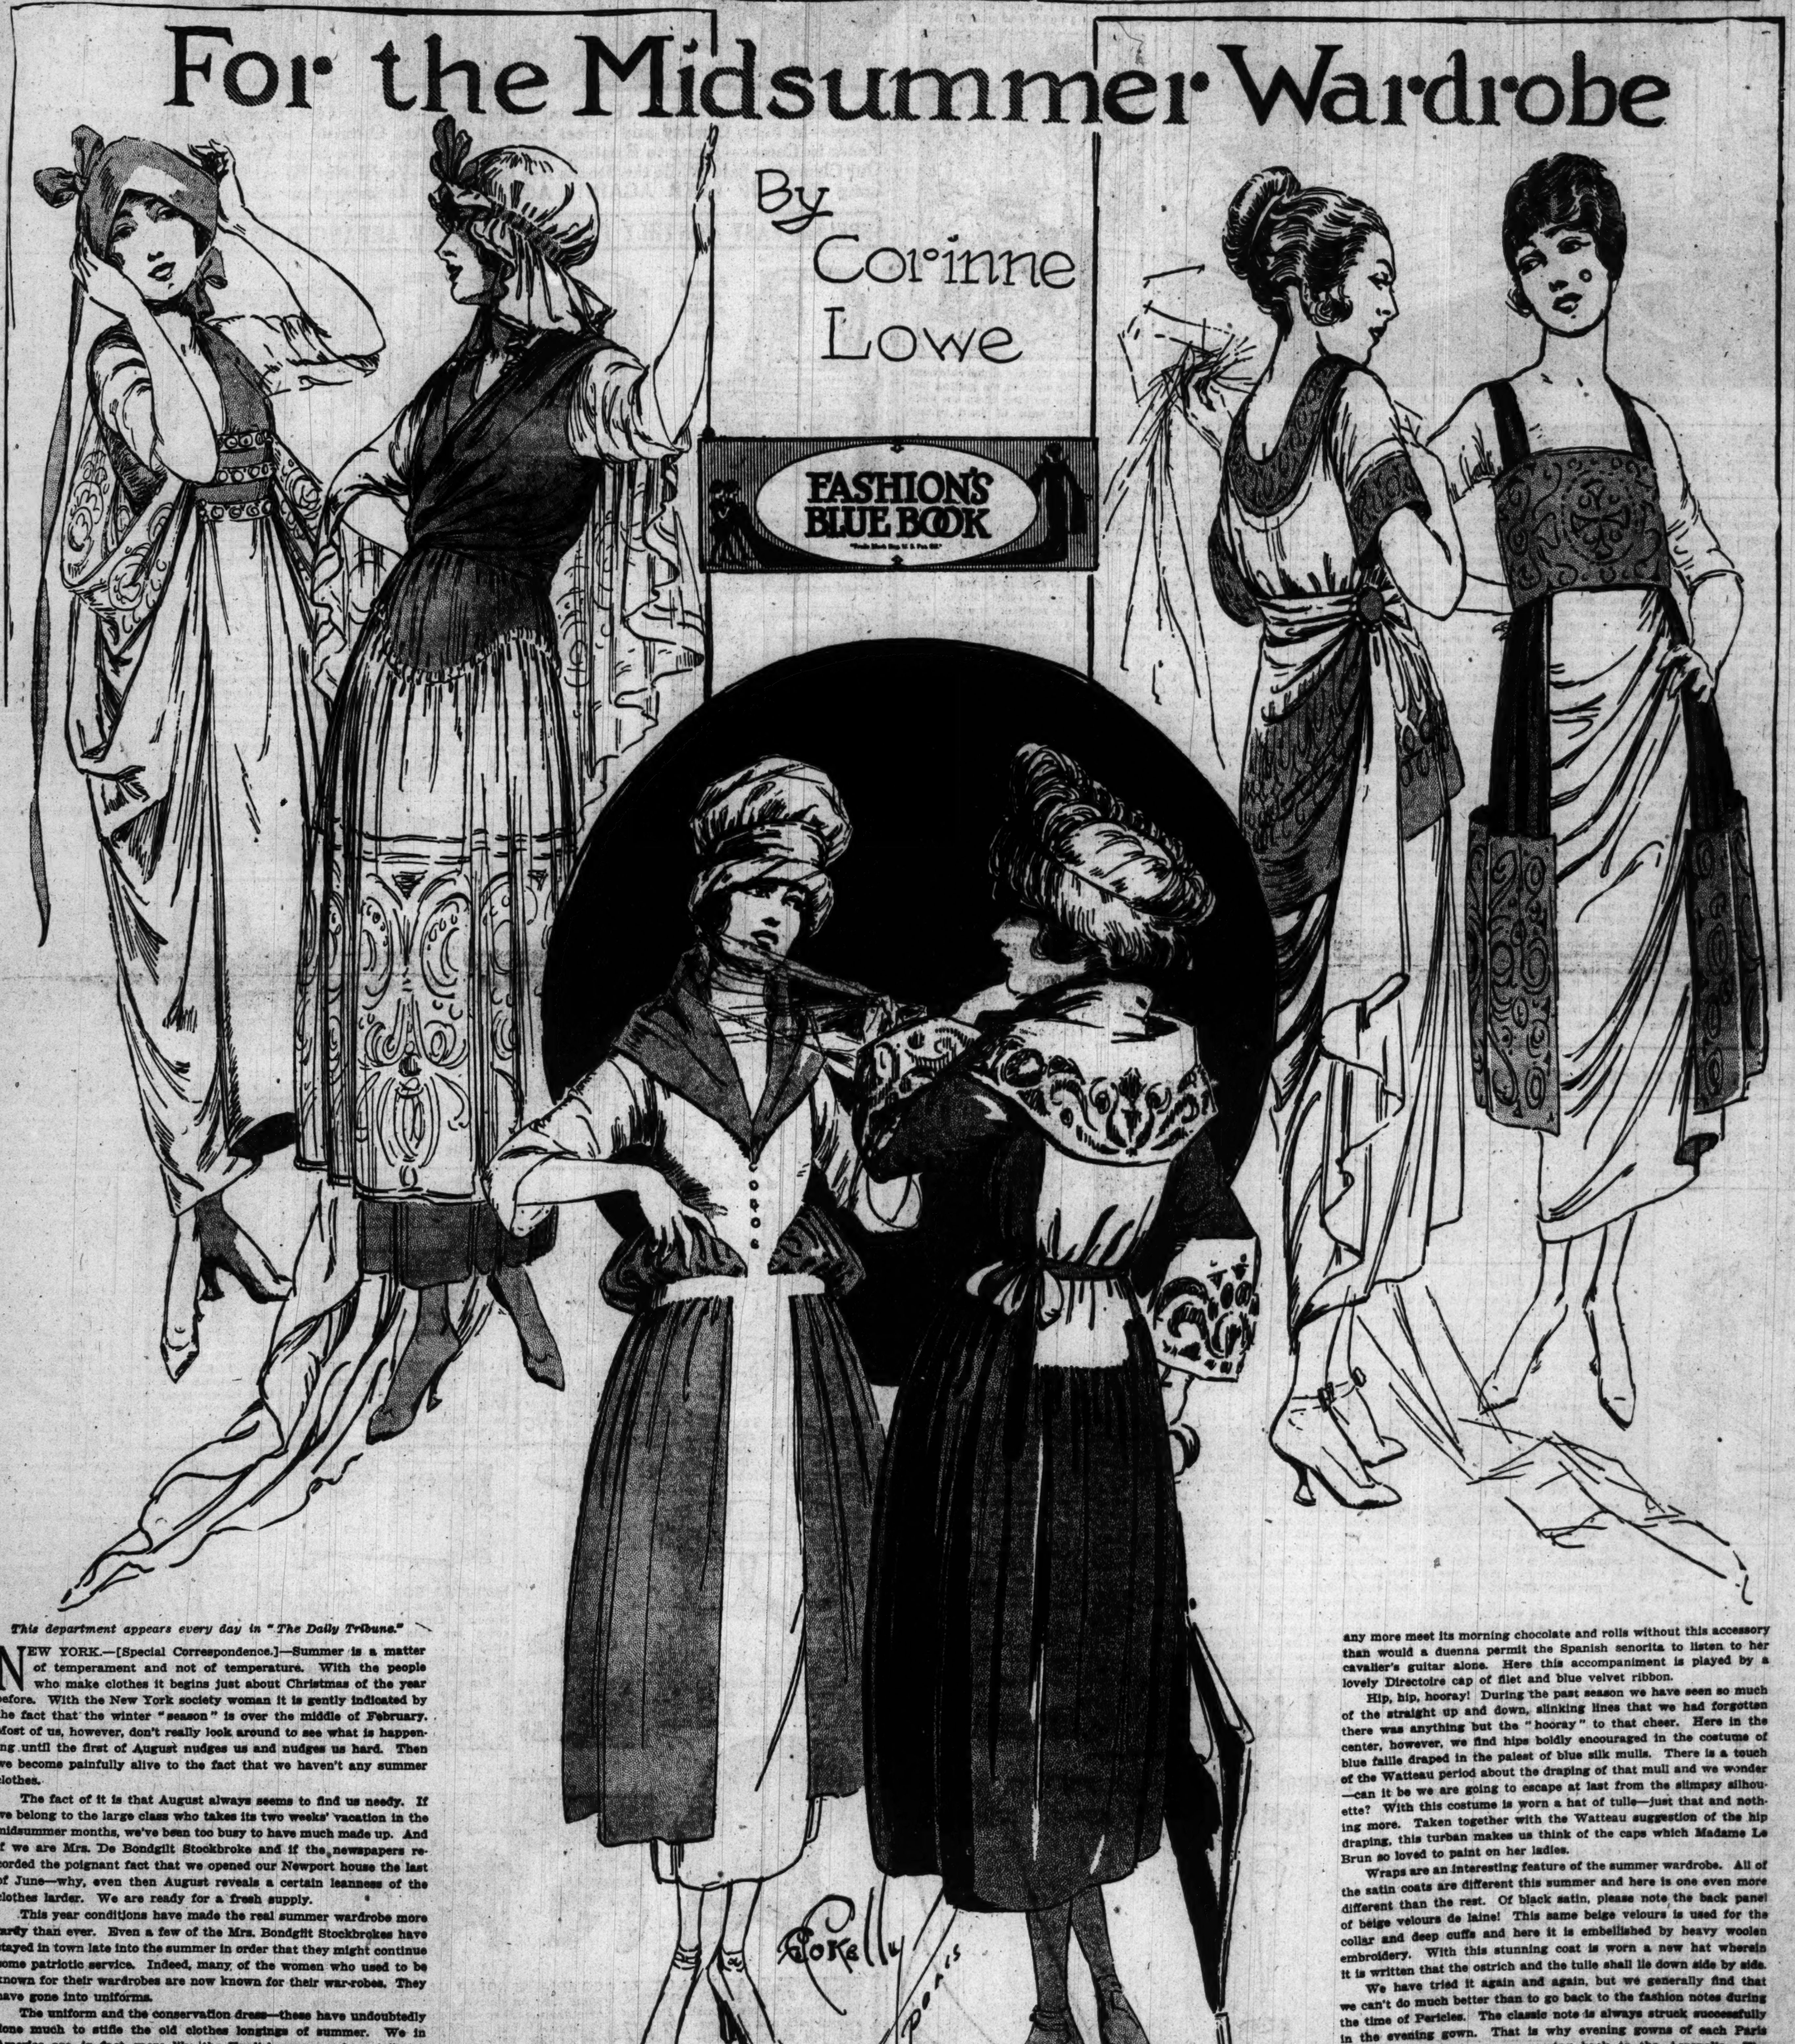
For the Midsummer Wardrobe

By Corinne Lowe



This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Summer is a matter of temperament and not of temperature. With the people who make clothes it begins just about Christmas of the year before. With the New York society woman it is gently indicated by the fact that the winter "season" is over the middle of February. Most of us, however, don't really look around to see what is happening until the first of August nudges us and nudges us hard. Then we become painfully alive to the fact that we haven't any summer clothes.

The fact of it is that August always seems to find us needy. If we belong to the large class who takes its two weeks' vacation in the midsummer months, we've been too busy to have much made up. And if we are Mrs. De Bondgilt Stockbroke and if the newspapers recorded the poignant fact that we opened our Newport house the last of June—why, even then August reveals a certain leanness of the clothes larder. We are ready for a fresh supply.

This year conditions have made the real summer wardrobe more tardy than ever. Even a few of the Mrs. Bondgilt Stockbrokes have stayed in town late into the summer in order that they might continue some patriotic service. Indeed, many of the women who used to be known for their wardrobes are now known for their war-robes. They have gone into uniforms.

The uniform and the conservation dress—these have undoubtedly done much to stifle the old clothes longings of summer. We in America are, in fact, more like the English women whose toilettes are said to be divided at present between the uniform looking suit for day wear and the evening clothes which they so gallantly wear just to prove to their boys how cheerful and just the same is everything at home.

The French, on the contrary, have never gone in for the uniform style of dressing. In spite of certain regulations of good taste, their summer resorts—Deauville and Trouville—are, according to our correspondent, still as clothes gay as ever in their history. And it is from the French that we have gathered the above midsummer modes.

As busy as the clock are these same elaborate and charming modes. The panel at the left shows two morning negligees; the center, two afternoon frocks, and the right, two new evening dresses. All are full of suggestions to those who expect to spend August and September at seaside or mountain.

Beginning with the morning costume, let us say once more that the French woman has ever since the war been a collector of exquisite negligees. She collects tea-gowns just as some people do butterflies and it's O such a frugal wardrobe that has only one or two of such garments! Upon these she lavishes all the art denied to her now through the abandonment of the evening gown, and as a result some of these creations are haughty enough to be looked at under the glass of a museum case.

Flesh color crepe de chine trimmed with lace tinted the same shade is the material selected for the first model and with this is worn a new cap of starched batiste with long ties of the same and with a bonnet effect in the back achieved by drawing in the material on silk cords. Even more exquisite and unusual than the first is the second negligee. This is of blue silk mull, to the skirt of which is attached a tunic of white net and filet lace. This might satisfy any ordinary, plodding skirt, but not so the present soaring phenomenon, for, flowing from the hip line in the back, is a train of the blue silk mull. Particularly graceful is the cape of this model—one of the same white net and filet of the tunic.

And, of course, with this—another cap! A Paris negligee wouldn't any more meet its morning chocolate and rolls without this accessory than would a duenna permit the Spanish senorita to listen to her cavalier's guitar alone. Here this accompaniment is played by a lovely Directoire cap of filet and blue velvet ribbon.

Hip, hip, hooray! During the past season we have seen so much of the straight up and down, slinking lines that we had forgotten there was anything but the "hooray" to that cheer. Here in the center, however, we find hips boldly encouraged in the costume of blue faille draped in the palest of blue silk mulls. There is a touch of the Watteau period about the draping of that mull and we wonder—can it be we are going to escape at last from the slimpsy silhouette? With this costume is worn a hat of tulle—just that and nothing more. Taken together with the Watteau suggestion of the hip draping, this turban makes us think of the caps which Madame Le Brun so loved to paint on her ladies.

Wraps are an interesting feature of the summer wardrobe. All of the satin coats are different this summer and here is one even more different than the rest. Of black satin, please note the back panel of beige velours de laine! This same beige velours is used for the collar and deep cuffs and here it is embellished by heavy woolen embroidery. With this stunning coat is worn a new hat wherein it is written that the ostrich and the tulle shall lie down side by side.

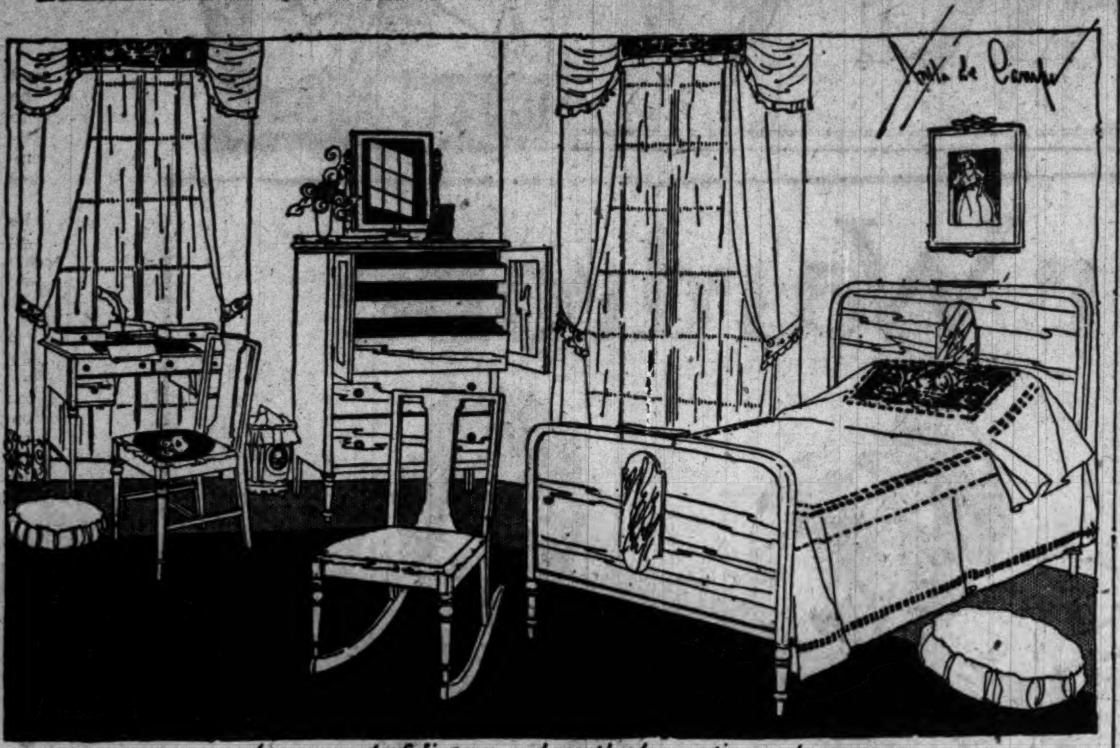
We have tried it again and again, but we generally find that we can't do much better than to go back to the fashion notes during the time of Pericles. The classic note is always struck successfully in the evening gown. That is why evening gowns of each Paris opening always have to go peering back to the Acropolis. The first of the evening gowns shown here follows the old classic recipe in its draped skirt and lovely tunic. In color, too, this gown is wonderfully charming. The foundation is flesh color satin and over this comes the tunic of rose crepe de chine embroidered with silver thread and pink silk floss.

The draped skirt seems to be more popular for evening dresses than is any other. Certainly it is more graceful and at the last is shown another draped model—this also of rose color. The satin of the underdress is of this tint and so, too, is the overdress and bodice. The latter take place in net heavily embroidered in silk of the same shades.

As will be noted, sandals are worn with several of these costumes. It is a new note in Paris and one which we may expect perhaps to see repeated on our own shores.

The HOME HARMONIOUS

by Anita de Campi



A remnant of linen used as the decorative note

Miss de Campi will be glad to assist the home maker in any problems pertaining to interior decorations. Address your letter to Miss Anita de Campi, "Sunday Tribune," Chicago. Inclose a stamped, addressed envelope if you wish a personal reply.

DURING these days of conservation, when it seems almost unpatriotic to suggest the purchase of things that are extravagant, it is pleasant to go into the subject of inexpensive fabrics and by their means to play up the possibilities of brightening up the home at small cost.

When gloom can be banished—whisked away with a few yards of chintz or pretty cretonne—surely the few cents a yard spent for it need not be begrudged. Gayly printed cottons are the homiest things on earth.

More than one woman lately has had her plans for the usual yearly redecorating and refurnishing entirely frustrated, and to these we can only say "cheer up, chintz is cheap," as a temporary solution of her difficulty.

Here is the instance of one that probably applies to hundreds. The young housewife had moved into new quarters, and prepared to have the decorating done by a professional decorator in the most approved fashion, not too elaborate, but in the best of taste. The living room was to be completely refurnished, as the present furniture was a sort of mission, rather angular, though not as heavy as the first examples of mission were. The upholstery was all in brown leather, decidedly shabby. The curtains of lace were beyond repair, and the "art glass" electric drops were garish.

A selection of furniture had been made. A beautiful davenport, a long narrow table to hold two lamps, and a flower bowl, a gate leg table for books and magazines, and another lamp, several easy chairs, a pretty wall table, with a mirror above it, and a little drawer to hold pencil and pad, gloves, and a powder box. The bookcase was built in.

Curtains were chosen of filmy straw colored silk gauze, and inside draperies of block printed linen, modern in pattern, showing on a ground of diapered gunmetal gray a plumaged peacock and some leaves and flowers of blossoming pumpkin vines. Peacock blue, orange, green, and gray then were the colors—all of which were to be repeated singly in the details of the room—in vases, cushions, upholstery, lamp shades, etc. And the drapery fabric itself was to be seen again in the upholstery of at least one large piece, chair or sofa.

When this point had been reached in the planning it was found that a halt had been called in family finances, and all the wonderful things selected must be foregone. No block printed linen at $8 a yard, none of the new furniture, so charming in line and scale and color, no lovely silk gauze or new seamless rugs could be purchased, and the young wife, all in tears over the disruption of her beautifully planned environment, bewailed her misfortune until some one burdened with real trouble made her feel how trifling her annoyance was, and brought her to know that the pride of possession is meager indeed; that beside pride of patriotism, or purpose, or achievement, or a dozen other more vital, more noble impulses, pride of possession deteriorates into mere vanity. The outcome of it was that the place was made pleasant to live in, notwithstanding conditions.

The color scheme, because color is so essential to harmony in our surroundings, was held to. The old furniture was retained but modified in this simple way. A pretty piece of cretonne was selected that combined the colors of the enviable linen. This, backed with cotton flannel, was upholstered on directly over the old brown leather. Colored leather nail heads were used that gave a decorative finish to the home upholstery work. Then, according to the first plan, extra cushions were made, repeating all colors singly, but velveteen, cotton rep, and mercerized cotton were used in place of silk velvet and taffeta.

The windows were equipped with casement curtains of gold colored cotton rep, with shallow lambrequins of the figured cretonne trimmed with black and yellow cotton fringe, and this trimming was repeated at the upper (not the lower) edge of the wide hem at the bottom of each curtain. The fringe is just basted at the hem top, so that it may be removed when the curtains are washed.

The curtaining was so pretty and so inexpensive that it was used again at every window in the house, including the kitchen. The only difference made in the kitchen windows was that the lambrequins were omitted.

The same cotton rep trimmed with fringe was used full upon wire lamp shades and gave a soft filtered light. Two shades contrived for use in the sun room were especially noticeable. The frames were deep dishpan shape and set with the lights inside of them right against the ceiling towards either end of the room. The sides of the shades were of shirred rep, while the disk at the bottom was of the brilliant cretonne.

Now, when the floors were stained deep brown (the old oriental rugs were kept) and the walls were calcimined a soft grayish beige, and the woodwork painted old ivory, the transformation from a gloomy to a contentful place was quite complete.

Sometimes a remnant of beautiful figured stuff can be had at a bargain. A little will suffice to make a piquant decorative note. An example of this is shown in the accompanying illustration. For this room a two yard remnant of lovely hand blocked linen gave the key to the whole effect. The colors in the linen were willow green, jade pink, wistaria, and old blue, with touches of straw color and black. This made a beautiful "palette" of tints. A quarter of a yard was used as a center panel in the lambrequins that were finished with full shaped pieces of old blue dress voile. The inside draperies of blue voile were held back with figured linen cuffs and trimmed at the bottom with a band of the same, while champagne colored glass curtains were of 12 cent silkoline, with the "glaze" washed off.

A half a yard more of the figured linen was inset in the bolster cover, which was merely a flat piece folded over and under the long feather pillow. The bed covers were made of old blue mercerized cotton, trimmed with narrow cotton backed black velvet ribbon, and the ribbon was not run through expensive beading, but whipped into an improvised beading, made of long parallel stitches done in thick straw colored embroidery silk. The rest of the linen remnant was cut and placed under glass on top of the dresser and chiffonier, with a margin of the wood showing all around them.

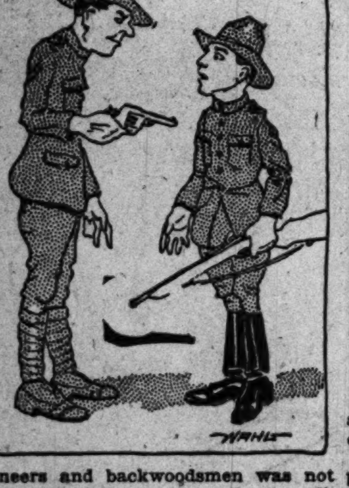
In this room the wall and woodwork are in two tints of light gray and the floor and carpet in darker tones of the same. The furniture is walnut.

Camp Stories Contest.

Your son, your brother, your husband, or your sweetheart in the service undoubtedly has told you some amusing incident that has occurred in his camp. Undoubtedly, too, there are ever so many stories originating in camp that are still untold. This contest is especially open to the soldier himself if he has a good camp story to tell. It is open also to every one who has been told a good camp story of actual happening. "The Tribune" will pay $1 for every letter published. Write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned. Address Camp Stories Editor, Chicago Tribune.

His Reserve Fund.

A guard is never to give up his gun or side arms for any purpose. Division headquarters heard a regiment composed mostly of Tennessee mountaineers and backwoodsmen was not maintaining a proper guard. An officer investigated.



"Give me your rifle," he said to a guard. It was passed over.

"Let me have your revolver." It was also passed over.

The officer stepped back: "Now, what are you going to do?" he questioned; "I have all your arms."

The sentry flashed a six shooter from his hip pocket: "Give me them guns," he said; "they ain't loaded—this is." W. H.

None in Sight.

A rookie just sent in to Fort Riley from the Ozark country was put on duty as barrack guard. The officer of the day chanced to pass him late at night and was permitted to pass unchallenged. He turned and asked the guard if he was on post there and received an affirmative reply.

The officer, thinking him to be a member of the guard, said, "Do you know general orders?"

Rookie gave him this reply: "Say, mister, I hain't seen nary a general since I come here." I. H. B.

Wasn't His Fault.

The young recruit was gifted with small feet and experienced difficulty in getting shoes to fit at the supply room. After several attempts the best he could do was many sizes too big. At drill that day the command was given to "mark time." All seemed to obey except him with the small feet. Singling him out, the commanding officer demanded to know why he was not "marking time." "Why, man alive," replied the poor fellow, "my feet are going, but my shoes ain't." F. T. Q.

No Time to Pick.

My brother in France writes me in a recent letter that the following incident took place in his battery:

An officer passed a private who was busily engaged in picking the "cooties" out of his clothing. The officer said to the private, "Picking them out, my man?"

To which the private replied, "No, sir, just taking them as they come." S. K.

Joined the Army.

A private in the quartermaster's corps at Camp Pike decided that he would sooner be in a more active branch of the service, so asked for and received a transfer to the artillery. After bidding him good-by, his bunkmate hung a service flag with one star in front of their barracks. On being asked what it all meant he said: "Our Joe has joined the army." E. O.

He Wanted Peace.

My brother was out at Camp Funston, Kas., and having gotten lost in a Negro camp and trying to find his way back was called by the Negro who was on guard duty, "Who goes dar?" "Lieutenant Johnston," was the reply. "Step forward and be reconciled." E. T.

Bright Sayings of Children

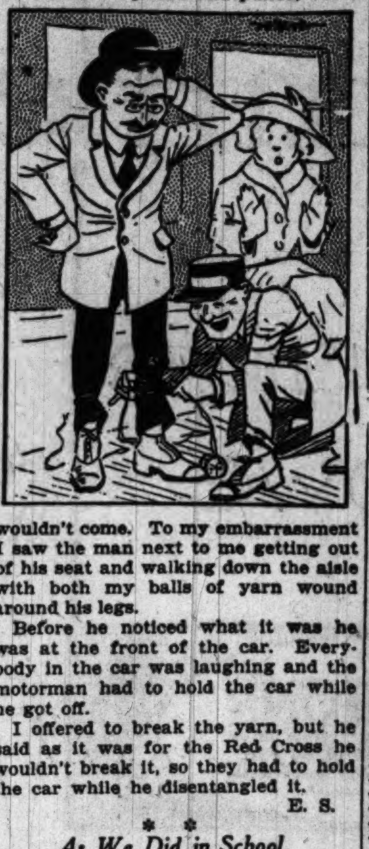
Held Up the Train.

My most embarrassing moment was when I was sitting on the car knitting. All of a sudden I noticed my yarn was caught and I pulled and pulled, but it wouldn't come. To my embarrassment I saw the man next to me getting out of his seat and walking down the aisle with both my balls of yarn wound around his legs.



Before he noticed what it was he was at the front of the car. Everybody in the car was laughing and the motorman had to hold the car while he got off.

I offered to break the yarn, but he said as it was for the Red Cross he wouldn't break it, so they had to hold the car while he disentangled it. E. S.

As We Did in School.

One day soon after school had closed for the summer vacation, my mother and I were eating dinner at a restaurant. I wanted something passed to me and without thinking I held up my hand and waved it around, just as we did in school in the fourth grade. Every one laughed; even my mother smiled. I felt so embarrassed that the rest of my dinner didn't taste very good. V. P. C.

Real Love Stories

MEMORIES.

SERGEANT BOB, 21 and homeward bound for the holidays, was introduced to Betty at Oklahoma City. A late start from camp and storm delayed trains made it useless to proceed. Betty was kind to the handsome young "birdman" and he spent his remaining day at her home.

After his return to Fort Sill they did not forget each other; back and forth flew letters and finally a diamond ring traveled the intervening miles and made a little girl happier.

There was to have been a longer furlough this summer and a trip to Colorado—Bob's home. Two weeks ago came the news of Bob's death in an explosion on the post field.

There was a military funeral and the silvery notes of "taps" were caught up by the mountains and flung back again. Sergeant Bob lies asleep at the foot of the snow-capped peaks he loved so well.

Gone are Betty's plans, her aircastles lie in ruins, but retrospection is sweet, for Bob's last words were, "Little girl, I love you." F. S.

Lift Off Corns!

"Freezone" is Magic! Lift any Corn or Callus right off with fingers—No pain!

Drop a little Freezone on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then you lift it right out. It doesn't hurt one bit. Yes, magic!

Why wait? Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of Freezone for a few cents, sufficient to rid your feet of every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and calluses, without soreness or irritation. Freezone is the much talked of ether discovery of a Cincinnati genius.

THE TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

Edited by Jane Eddington.

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

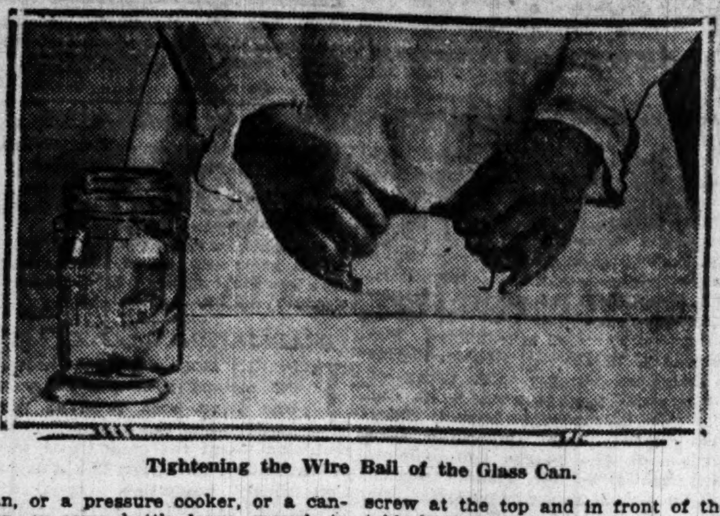
This department appears every day in "The Daily Tribune."

THIS YEAR'S CANNING.

LAST year I saw a highly paid demonstrator of cookery lose out in a great community where she had for several seasons been popular for no other reason, I think, than because she treated the business of canning so lightly and did the work so badly, along with indefinite and old time directions.

She was not up to date, but as she had long assumed all knowledge in cookery and housekeeping she was not willing to pass this. Her audience had been in the business so much more thoroughly and in so whole souled a manner that her superficial treatment exasperated them. She dumped peaches into the can, although they can be rapidly and beautifully packed, saving space. She slighted important details of procedure, and altogether left a bad impression.

Unfortunately this lecturer had followed immediately after one who at the beginning of the canning movement, some half a dozen years ago, had gone into it heart and soul, and therefore could, when she began to teach it, leave a crystal clear impression of every step of the canning process. She emphasized every smallest fact, slighting nothing. I have watched the work of other highly accomplished canners and have seen that they left a confused impression.



Tightening the Wire Ball of the Glass Can.

This year, more than last, the demonstrator of canning will stand or fall according as she does leave a clear or a confused impression. Women and men and boys and girls have had more and better opportunities to learn how to can than to do any other one thing in the cooking line, for fine canning is fine cooking. They are, therefore, more critical when they see shabby or slipshod work.

Holder Which Makes a False Bottom for Canner Unnecessary.

Getting Things Ready.

The first thing to consider in canning is your outfit. Have you a boiler, or a new and well soldered garbage can, or a pressure cooker, or a canner, or some kettle large enough to hold all the cans you like to put up at one time and deep enough so that they may be immersed completely and an inch more, with still space above so that the water will not boil over? Get your canner in order, making or buying a false bottom for a home made outfit, unless you have the individual holders.

All cans that have been standing empty should be brought out and washed thoroughly. If they are not right then to be put on the fire, filled, and covered with cold water, to be raised and held at sterilizing temperature, put them away well covered, so that they will be ready at a minute's notice to be sterilized.

Old mason jars and tops should be tested by filling them with hot water and a rubber and inverting. Old tops of several years back must be thoroughly sterilized with the jars, and the edges smoothed down with a heavy and dull knife, if they have been carelessly bent out of shape. Of course, if the porcelain inside is cracked they should be discarded.

The bail that clamps down the glass tops, if it does not go down with a good spring, may easily be removed and bent into shape. Take it in both hands and press down in the middle with both thumbs. Do not bend it too much, for if it goes down with too much of a snap it will break the jar.

Glass Slivers Cause Leakage.

With the same heavy knife it is a good plan to go around the tops of new jars to scrape off any slivers of glass found thereon. These cut through the rubber and cause it to deteriorate, so that the can will leak. Half of the big straight-sided jars with the metal tops which I bought last year had these little glass splinters around where the rubber rested.

Women used to be terribly helpless about doing all these semi-mechanical things, but they are much behind the times today if they refuse to learn the mechanics of household utensils and work. Utensils of more or less complicated type are multiplying, and save endless labor. We must learn how to regulate them. I was particularly ashamed of myself once to think I had allowed the hands on my scales—an instrument most convenient in the canning business—to speak untruly, when I found that there was a little screw at the top and in front of the table for regulating them.

But before we leave the subject of cans let us say that we should do as does the dealer who sacrifices his old stock of canned goods just before the new season pack. Perhaps we need the cans for more profitable material this year. Rubbers dry and rot. Even if they do not, old canned stuff is not as good as new, nor as worth while as food, although there are exceptions.

It is not a nice thing to get a lot of fruits or vegetables into your house and perhaps have them partially prepared for the cans only to discover that you have no rubbers and it is the grocer's half holiday. Get your supply of rubbers and get the best. Perhaps there has been enough said on that subject in these columns. There is no one detail in the business of canning that is more important. And have your directions ready before you buy or gather your food!

Now if you are ready, go! But are you ready? Ask yourself this with all the emphasis needed.

Master the Details.

To can with high success it is necessary to have a clear conception of the steps of the process before you begin. There are a great number of interesting details to know and understand about your materials and in just the measure you are interested will your pleasure in canning be great. It is people who only half grasp each and everything in life that find work and life intolerably dull. Know a thing to the heart and you will find it interesting, and even compelling in its interest. Half know how to do anything, and you will be nervous or become easily exhausted in doing it.

The fruits and vegetables to be canned should be as fresh as possible and as clean. In many cases it is best to sort them for uniformity and condition. They must be prepared intelligently and in the case of scalding and dipping for cold pack work they must be packed into the jars with the greatest dispatch and the boiling water ready to be poured over them.

Mere children have learned to pack vegetables and fruits in such a way that they have put into a can twice and three times as much as the careless packer can. That is economy of jars, more necessary this year than ever before because jars are so much more expensive. The demonstrator mentioned as losing out got about half as much into a jar as a mere amateur in packing could. Attractive packs of fruit and vegetables give great satisfaction besides representing this economy.

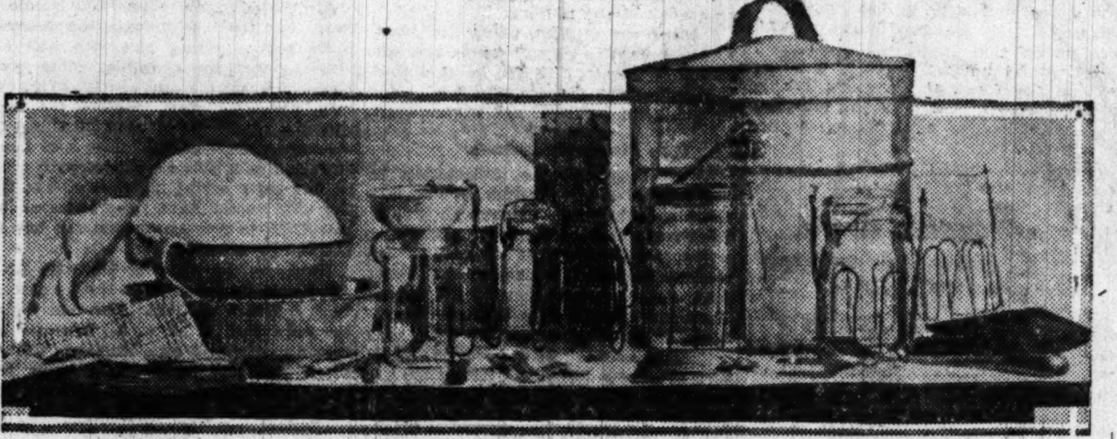
Things That Destroy Food.

Foods are perishable because the things that destroy them are so numerous. It is not finicky or silly to give attention to these things. A knowledge of them is of value in every day of one's life, why postpone learning about them? A great many of them are our every day enemies and war with them should be constant. They have met and taken the food that is not fresh, therefore one of the canning club slogans has been "From the patch with dispatch." On the other hand, last year thousands of cans of good food were put up in New York which was salvaged from containers in which half the product was decaying.



Resoldered New Garbage Can for the Preserving and Other Equipment Made Ready for the Work.

A chapter in the most comprehensive book on canning yet put out, "Successful Canning and Preserving," by Ola Powell, is devoted to the subject of "Bacteriology As Applied to Canning." It is a textbook and this chapter mostly concerns things you can see only under a microscope, but they are intensely interesting if you will give your intelligent attention and interest to them. Every housewife has some knowledge of them gained by experience. The young student learns by a much quicker and easier method, and learns how to combat these ever present enemies.

It is an interesting thing to see, floating under glass, forms that seem like beautiful sea mosses or coral growths or a cat's whiskers or endless other things, and to realize that these marvels are ever present in the air and water and on the foods we eat.

Thorough Training Needed.

Most of the books on canning, even the new ones for this year, consist mainly of recipes. Miss Powell's is not even half recipes. Recipes are good, splendid, and indispensable in their place, but a principle which underlies work done with any one of them, a fundamental recipe, is of the order of the training a pharmacist receives before he is allowed to put together medical formulas. The putting together of our food formulas in the best ways has more of an influence for health than one worker in five hundred engaged in these processes imagines.

Madame Housewife, you who have perhaps already done a part of your season's canning, how many questions on the subject could you answer? This means how many crystal clear conceptions of the business have you? Each chapter in the book mentioned has a set of questions and a bibliography at the end. There are over 150 of the questions. The book has also 163 pictures, most of them highly suggestive or helpful, most especially as regards equipment.

There is one thing that has not come to the author's attention in the matter of accurate utensils to use in canning. She gives a picture of some thermometers, a clock, scales, and cups with the legend, "Special equipment necessary to obtain most successful and accurate results," but the cups used are of glass. She has trusted the manufacturer of these, but, as far as I know, every one of these glass cups is inaccurate, containing only fourteen tablespoons where they should contain sixteen.

Sealing Important This Year.

There is information in this book about sealing that is of more importance this year than ever before, because we need to use every sort of can and bottle. In the chapter on fruit juices, which are considered from a medicinal, daily menu, and social function standpoint, there is the following on "Home Made Sealing Wax": "Melt together equal parts of shoemaker's wax and resin. This should be done in a pan of hot water and to make it a pretty amber color. Dip the corked bottles into this after it has melted." Directions for making wax of different colors follow.

This may not seem important, but some wonderful work has been done in putting up decorative little containers of jelly and marmalades, and sealing wax has been one of the means. Gifts of this type, especially to go to the disabled and ill, are appealing. I have seen some of these things that were almost as beautiful as flowers, lacking only the life but possessing a fragrance, when opened, to rival almost the rose.

One of the pictures also shows how to seal a crock with a band of cheesecloth dipped into boiling paraffin. Glass jars, such as we use for cereals, are sealed in much the same way. Manufacturers of a certain product seal these with a deep sunken cork with paraffin or wax over.

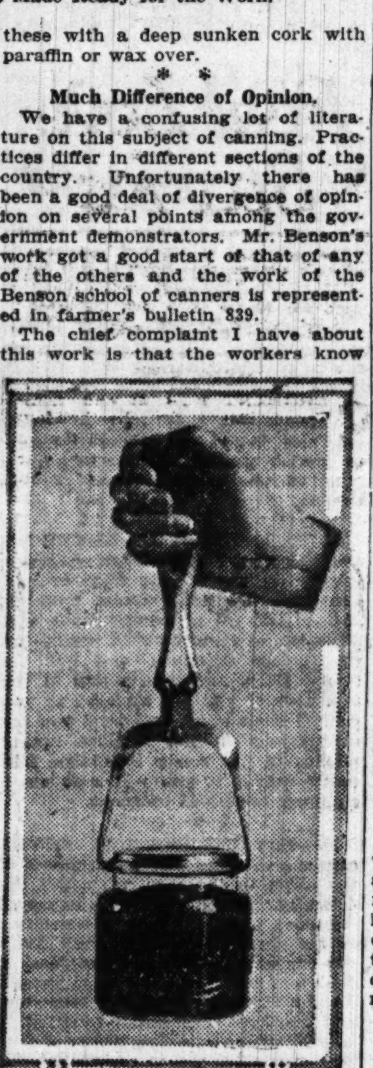
Much Difference of Opinion.

We have a confusing lot of literature on this subject of canning. Practices differ in different sections of the country. Unfortunately there has been a good deal of divergence of opinion on several points among the government demonstrators. Mr. Benson's work got a good start of that of any of the others and the work of the Benson school of canners is represented in farmer's bulletin 839.

The chief complaint I have about this work is that the workers know too little of dietetics. They realize that these can products are to eat, but they do not always follow the best eating principles.



"The Claw" is an Invaluable Utensil Whether You Use a False Bottom in the Canner or an Individual Holder; Many Kitchen Uses Also.

If meat is to be put into cans they would not have it done by amateurs, but since their directions are printed and spread broadcast any amateur may undertake the canning of meat. Food manufacturers have spent thousands of dollars and have had the most learned chemists in their laboratories working on the meat canning problems, but even their product sometimes turns out to be dangerous. The trouble is that the dangers in it are invisible.

If any woman has set her heart on putting chicken in cans I should advise her either to see George E. Farrell do it, if he happens to come into her community, or to get the twenty pictures of his work that appeared in the Country Gentleman Dec. 29, 1917. These pictures show how to cut up the chicken almost entirely before it is drawn, which is somewhat the method of the chef, or used to be, who fried chicken in quantities, leaving the rack for the soup kettle.

Sterilize with a Cotton Plug and Cover This with Wax, Tin Foil, or Paraffin to Keep Out Mold.

But lest you cannot get these pictures, here are a part of the points pictured: (1) Remove the tips of the wings, cutting at the first joint; (2) remove the wings; (3) remove the feet, cutting at the knee joint; (4) remove the legs, cutting at the hip or saddle joint; (5) cut the removed portion of each leg into two parts at the joint; (6) cut through the neck bone with a sharp knife, but do not cut the windpipe or gullet; (7) with index finger separate the gullet and windpipe from the skin of the neck; (8) cut through the skin of the neck to the wing opening; (9) cut round the shoulder blade, pull it out of position and break it, cut through the ribs on white spots; (10) remove the digestive tract from the bird, pulling it back toward the vent; (11) cut off the neck close to the body and cut through the backbone at the joint or just above the diaphragm; (12) remove the oil sack, separate the breast from the backbone by cutting through the white spots; (13) cut the filet from each side of the breastbone; (14) cut in sharp at the point of the breastbone, turning the knife and cutting away the wishbone with the meat.

Now all these points are good when we merely wish to cut up a chicken for cooking. The chef would cut the meat off the breast in fillets for frying and disjoint the legs and wings for frying, and not subject these to possible contamination by bacteria. This sort of bacteria is exceedingly difficult to kill, and that is why the canning of chicken or any meat is risk, unless exceeding cleanliness and care is exercised, and I must say that I find truly clean people not too numerous. If a chicken is the least bit old it always seems best to me to remove the tendons of the legs. This can be done by cutting the skin around the joint at the knee, turning it back to break it and then to pull off the feet.

Use Any Kind of a Can, Utilizing Anything You Have.

Best Things to Can.

Tomatoes, beets, cherries, and peaches seem to me to be among the best things to can. It seems to me to be a higher and better form of conservation to dry green beans, corn, pumpkin, and carrots and perhaps peaches and also waste apples.

Conserves this year will best fit the needs of the hour if we use raisins and other sweet fruits to replace the sugar. It is astonishing how far you can make the sugar go. Even with a quart of currants a cup of sugar, helped out with an equal measure of raisins, a fair conserve can be made. I do not know how well it will keep, but well sealed there is no doubt but that it would keep all right. All conserves are most palatable, to my mind, when only a few months old.

The English custom of using a filler in jams is increasingly popular. The filler most commonly in use now is the carrot. One has to use little or no sugar to balance it. A rather large jar of one of these carrot and orange marmalades came to me not long since with the information that last fall when carrots were 1 cent a pound this cost a fraction over 3 cents a glass.

It is worth while to take one product and perfect your skill in putting that into cans and then you may branch out. The professional teacher starts his pupils with tomatoes, one of the easiest things to can.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING TO WIN THE WAR?

Have you ideas on food, dress, and health conservation to pass along, or ideas on money saving and money raising? This department is an exchange for the women who are helping to win the war. For every letter published "The Tribune" will pay $1. Do you need advice on questions pertaining to this important work of helping win the war. This department will advise you gladly. Write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned. Address letters on this subject to Antoinette Donnellay, Chicago Tribune.

Using Table Scraps.

Instead of burning the table scraps we have put them around the roots of the potatoes in the potato patch. A little ground should be raked over to prevent any odor. This has fertilized the ground and has greatly increased our yield of potatoes this year.

Using Windblown Apples.

Wind blown apples which sometimes are rather tasteless may be utilized by making apple clove jelly. The jelly is made in the usual way except that a small bag of ground cloves is put into the jelly while it is boiling. The flavor given is most delicious.

Saving at 12.

Teacher wants us all to see if we can't earn enough this summer, while on our vacations, to buy one big war coupon when we come back this fall. So I'm going to make a little money by being an errand girl for four of our neighbors.

Each day I'm going to help them a little with their housework and then do all their shopping. In this way I'll learn to buy savingly and won't let the butcher and grocer cheat me any with poor goods.

Each woman has promised to pay me 50 cents a month, which will be $4 for the two months, and I'll earn that extra dollar somehow. Not much, but that is all I can do, for I'm not old enough to go to work as yet. I'm going to be 12 years old next week.

He Eats Frugally.

A year ago I thought nothing of going to lunch with two or three of the boys in our office, where we ate more than was good for us and spent from $4 to $6 a week for the lunches. On a trip recently to Dayton I was much surprised to see in the general offices of a well known concern, young ladies, department heads and assistants, spreading paper over the tops of their desks and opening lunch boxes and milk bottles for their noon meal.

I asked and was told that the employés had plenty of time and there were good restaurants nearby, but that they were putting their savings into war saving stamps, hence the "carry your lunch" movement, approved by the general manager himself.

On returning I too persuaded my wife that a little lunch, well put up was better for a man at noon than a lot of heat and sleep producing food in a restaurant. I feel better, I'm rapidly filling my book with stamps, and am gradually reducing to the proper weight, for I have been overweight for almost three years.

Saving Tailor's Bill.

In order to save the tailor's bill for altering the length of a skirt one can do it herself in this way: Put on the skirt and adjust the belt band carefully. Stand by the dining table and hold a piece of contrasting color chalk flush with the table top. Turn slowly, marking the skirt as you turn. Then, after the skirt is off, turn the hem at the desired distance below this mark, which will be about two or three inches below the hips. Skirts turned up in this way are exactly even.

Trimmed Ice Bill.

In my attempt at saving I hit upon the following scheme which cut my ice bills in two. I made a woolen pad a half inch thick, using an old blanket, which completely covered the top of the ice chamber.

From the wrappers that come around bread, those that were perfect I devised a case of paraffin paper, inserted the pad in the case, and pinned it at the open edge. I placed this pad on top of the fresh cake of ice, thereby keeping away from the ice the down draft of warm air which is the principal cause of the rapid melting.

The paraffin cases keep the pad from coming in contact with the ice.

The same pad can be used for a long time, with fresh covers provided as the old ones become soiled.

Using Old Skirts.

With the general feeling of saving, also of the scarcity of linen, I have hit upon a scheme that might be followed by others if they happen to have an old linen suit of ample material, but quite impossible as to style as mine was.

Out of the lower part of the many gores of the skirt I got six good sized luncheon napkins and the other half dozen, with some little trying were gotten from the tops of the good sized sleeves and from the coat. There were also smaller pieces of linen which I hemmed for small picnic napkins. Out of one coat or even a skirt all kinds of useful things of linen can be evolved.

So often skirts of this kind are sent to rummage sales, where they are many times sold for 5 or 10 cents, when they might easily be put to a far more helpful purpose, especially when one wants to save.

ARMY SCHOOL FOR NURSES.

ONE of the women in an office has just resigned her position as index clerk to resume nursing, which had been her profession up to two years ago. She had given it up because her health had failed her, but when our government declared war she made up her mind that she would go back to her profession, and for the last year has taken such wonderful care of herself that now she is in splendid condition and fully able, she believes, to stand the possible hardships before her.

"It's my duty to go back to nursing," she said the other day. "The country is woefully short of trained women, and every one is needed now."

The government is calling not only the women who have been trained for nursing but, according to the authorized statement of the surgeon general of the army, an army school of nursing, with branch training schools in various selected military hospitals throughout the United States, is to be established.

This is the opportunity that many young women have been looking for, the opportunity to serve their country to the fullest extent.

According to the official bulletin of June 7, "the plan of the army school of nursing is based upon the standards which have been found to be desirable and which have yielded the best results in the operation of our civil hospitals so far as relates to the care of the sick. It is apparent to all that if those are to be used who are unskilled in nursing methods careful attention must be given to their training and supervision. To accomplish this the army school of nursing is to be created.

It should be noted that all these patriotic young women who desire to serve will have a chance to serve in the army school of nursing, provided they meet the requirements. In addition to opening up this great opportunity for service to young women of the country, it is proposed to lay out this course of training in such a way that it will lead to something definite. The army school offers to women desiring to care for the sick and wounded soldiers a course leading to a diploma in nursing, should the military hospitals continue in operation for the full period of the course. Should a cessation of hostilities occur before the completion of this period a certificate will be issued entitling the holder to credit in a civil hospital for the branches in nursing successfully completed and the term of service in the army school of nursing."

A high school education or its equivalent will be a requisite to enrollment in this school, and applicants must be between the ages of 21 and 35. Until otherwise specified applications may be sent directly to the army school of nursing, office of the surgeon general of the army, Washington, D. C., and the necessary papers will be forwarded.

It is expected that this call to young women to serve their country in the noblest way will not go unheeded.

Refrigerator Has Odor.

"Our new refrigerator smells of paint, although we have had it for a whole month. For the first week we left it open night and day in a draft of fresh air. What can we do to get rid of the odor? It is a terrible inconvenience not to be able to use one's refrigerator in hot weather.

"MRS. J. N. M."

Burn a pan of charcoal in it for all of one day. Swash ice cold water freshly through it that evening, and at night set four or five pans of iced water upon the shelves and shut the doors. The volatile particles arising from the paint cause the odor. When precipitated into the water they cannot rise again.

Better Housekeeping

By Mary Bronson Hartt

Need of Place to Rest.

When it is practicable to devote a small room near the kitchen to the private use of the maid, especially if there be only one of her to do the multifarious duties of the household, it is a splendid thing. In some modern houses the maid's sleeping room is off a passage leading to the kitchen. But when the maid sleeps on the third floor her own room is too far from her work to take the place of a rest room.

What is wanted is a place with a couch in it where a tired girl can fling herself down half a dozen times a day to ease her back and her feet that have such a deal of standing to do, yet be near enough to the cook stove to listen for things boiling over, ready to spring up at the sound of the bell or of her mistress' voice.

Undoubtedly it is as soothing to the nerves of a maid of all work to get out of sight of the implements of her craft for a few minutes in the day as it is to a mother to shut herself away for an hour from the beloved faces and voices of her children. Some days a conscientious maid might have an hour's solid rest in the afternoon without neglecting her work, or ever going off duty in the sense of being beyond instant call.

No Privacy in Kitchen.

One reason nice girls won't come to work in our kitchens if they can get anything else to do is that they have no privacy there, not even when they have callers in the evening. The children dash out at frequent intervals to get a drink and to stare the maid's callers out of countenance. At any moment master or mistress may appear to do some tinkering or give a forgotten direction.

Considering the difficulties of the domestic service situation, would it not be better if the maid were permitted to call the kitchen her castle between the evening hours of 8 and 10? She might be required to bring to the dining room every night after the table was cleared a generous pitcher of ice water. If ginger ale or other refreshments were wanted for guests later in the evening perhaps she would prefer to have you ring for her to bring them than have you pop in the kitchen unannounced to scare her bashful swain.

When there's a servant's hall, or when the little restroom is big enough for the maid to entertain in, of course this problem disappears.

It has been suggested that it would be an economy of the maid of all work's energy if she had a bell or other signal to notify her mistress when she is needed to interview a really important egg man or fruit man at the back door. Another economy would be an extension telephone. How many times a day the maid in a busy household travels up or downstairs to hear in dulcet tones, "There's no one on the line now; I'll call for you if you're wanted!"

Speaking of maids, a practical housewife has an accurate gauge of the extravagance or economy of a maid of all work if she keeps from year to year her housekeeping accounts. Presumably the housekeeper herself remains a stable quality in the matter of providing. If Hilda is more economical than last year's Nora, make left-overs count, then taking into account the steady rise in the cost of living, the household accounts ought

Doris Blake Says

If you were born this week you are

Courageous.

Have you a perplexing love affair in which you need the counsel of a friend? Write Doris Blake, care "The Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply send stamped, addressed envelope.

IF you were born this week you are one of Leo's own children—jovial, free, friendly, and, above all, courageous! Like all fire people (that being the Leo sign), you are active, standing always in danger of burning out your own vitality. You possess this quality in body as well as in brain, yet withal yours is not the activity that accomplishes, but rather a nervous restlessness.

You are an independent thinker, impatient under opposition, a free thinker so far as your opinions are concerned, but not always so willing to grant this freedom to others. You are original, daring, so much so sometimes that you invite criticism. You are full of curiosity, and cannot pass a knot hole in a fence without looking through it.

Beneath all your energy is an inborn laziness that is shown in your catlike love of luxury and ease. You detest physical exertion of any kind, and great mental effort is equally distasteful to you. Some one once said that "Leo people leave their heads empty for the devil to dance in," and he certainly does dance, reeling off satire, wit, and gay nothings that make for you hosts of friends.

You belong also to the class of born lovers and depend as much for your well-being on love and affection as plants do on light and warmth. You are persistent in your efforts to find love and, once having found it, will fight for it. You are motherly, with a love for family and children that knows no bounds. Perhaps you may be harsh and exacting with them, but it will not answer for any one else to be so with them. You assume more quarrels on behalf of those you love than on any account of your own. Like Aries people, you reach your greatest heights through the nobility of your love nature, because you will go to any lengths and sacrifice yourself to an extent for those you love.

Neatness is another virtue that a great many of you possess in a marked degree and harmony is absolutely necessary if you would retain your health. Harmony is medicine to your nerves, and if you find it, the warm, sunny geniality of your nature shows up in striking contrast to the irritable nervousness which you develop under opposite conditions. The keynotes of your nature being faith, love, and harmony, you can readily understand when the last is lacking what contradictions will result.

You should choose your mate from among those born under Aquarius, Jan. 21-Feb. 19, or Libra, Sept. 24-Oct. 23.

You will be most fortunate during your own sign and during the week beginning Jan. 27. Your colors are red, yellow, and green; your birthstone, the sardonyx.

You will find success as physician, actor, designer, florist, musician, or military commander. Surely a large enough field for you to choose from!

Really Nice Girls Don't.

"Dear Miss Blake: I am a girl of 15 the streets in motors at night with and am going with a boy of 16. I like him. He has offered to take me to shows and automobile riding, but I have always refused. "SQUIRREL."

I think 15 too young for shows and auto rides with a young man, and I'd keep on refusing for a year or so more. You can have the boy come over to your house as long as he has your parents' approval, but really nice girls of your age are not allowed to go around young men.

HEALTH and BEAUTY ATROCITIES TRACED to PYORRHEA

Sunken Cheeks and Mouth from Missing Teeth

Mouth and Cheeks where no Teeth are Missing

> What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Shy on hair? Oily hair, oily skin, freckles, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Or, what is your beauty ill? Write it in to me. I have a tonic, a diet, an exercise, or a set of exercises for what ails you and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send stamped, addressed envelope. Address Antoinette Donnelly, Chicago Tribune.

YOU hear of more people reporting on their own or a brother's or a sister's or a friend's illness and relating of sufferings and threatened operations but to discover that the appendix or the heart was not to blame. But the teeth were!

Just the other day I heard of a man living in the east who was doctoring for gout. He went to California to see what its climate and the rest would do. But he arrived back home after a couple of months' vacation, there to discover that it wasn't gout, but pyorrhea.

You hear of a thousand and one ills that are eventually diagnosed as bad teeth. Dr. Charles H. Mayo said: "The next great advance in the prevention of disease is the knowledge that chronic diseases and special local diseases, such as neuritis, sciatica, and acute paralysis, come from mouth infections in the majority of instances; also appendicitis, diseases of the gall bladder, and ulcerated stomach. While there are several sources in the body for the entrance of bacteria and their growth in a local focus, the mouth is far the most common situation. The tonsils commonly harbor disease germs. In pyorrhea we find these germs in cavities and abscesses at the roots of the teeth from natural decay and in special abscesses at the apex of a tooth, all of which are often the result of faulty or old time dentistry."

So, you see, the fundamental element of beauty, which is health, of course, is subject to the most deadly attacks when you let your teeth go neglected. And pyorrhea is caused by neglect of mouth hygiene or by faulty dentistry.

Not all teeth, to be sure, that have to be extracted are the result of pyorrhea. But many of them are. Children and young adults lose their teeth from decay. In the majority of cases adults lose theirs from pyorrhea.

Where teeth are out there follow a caving in of the cheek or mouth. And lines appear! As years go on the caving in process becomes more noticeable, until, if the teeth are not replaced, it develops into a condition quite noticeably ugly. The nose and the chin threaten to meet in some cases and the shape of the mouth and the corners thereof are quite distorted.

A lot of women—women, say, going on 40—who have been neglectful of their teeth in the past, and missing or infected teeth proclaim this neglect, get the idea that they are beyond the age where it matters much whether the teeth would make much difference in their looks or not and so they just let them run along neglected still further, always somehow finding money for a new suit or dress, but never being able to find it for dentistry.

Which you may readily see is the last word in bad management when health and looks depend so greatly upon the condition of the mouth.

There is no time in the life of any one—from baby days to old age—that mouth hygiene is not an important feature, when research in the foremost laboratories of the country shows that neglect of the teeth entails such far reaching consequences.

Dr. F. P. Bushspies says, "if people would use salt on their gums and teeth, applying it to the brush as you do any tooth paste or dentifrice, and do this three times a week, there would be fewer cases of pyorrhea. The beginning of this trouble may be detected through the appearance of red spots on the gums, which if not taken care of gradually get larger and larger until the teeth are reached and then the loosening process and the final loss of teeth results.

If a dentist were visited every six months the disease would have little chance to get a foothold. The trouble is in letting it go a year or two years or more before considering the danger signals important."

You want to be sure that your dentist is a good one and knows how to treat pyorrhea if you find you are a sufferer. As in every other profession there are good and bad, and a man who is ignorant of pyorrhea treatment may advise you to have teeth removed that could be treated and saved by one who knew his business. And a tooth is far too precious a jewel to let it be "highway robbed" that way.

It is a rare thing in these days to find a mouth of a person past 16 years not needing medical treatment and repair. It is estimated not one person out of a hundred properly cares for his mouth. The most frequent excuse is that it takes too much time.

The ordinary perfunctory use of the tooth brush alone will not keep your mouth sanitary. The use of mouth washes and powders is confined more or less to a portion of the surface of the teeth. Your teeth should be brushed thoroughly after each meal, of course.

In addition, however, your gums and the sockets of your teeth must be kept stimulated. And this you do by brushing the gums, using a stiff brush and a rotary motion. If your gums are sensitive use a moderately stiff brush until you can bear the more vigorous treatment. In addition to stimulating the circulation of the gums this strengthens their resistance and keeps the gum margins free from tartar.

Get your dentist's advice as to whether you should use an acid or alkaline wash.

Fruit acids, such as grape juice, orange and lemon juice, and apples, stimulate a flow of saliva and are cleansing. An apple eaten in the evening will mechanically and chemically cleanse the teeth, and if followed by proper brushing will protect them from the action of bacteria during the night.

Lime water is the best alkaline mouth wash. It is made from coarse unslaked lime. Another good mouth wash is a weak solution of bicarbonate of soda and common salt (equal parts of each, a teaspoonful to the pint), or with lime water.

Pyorrhea has become almost universally prevalent. While it is not always due to conscious neglect, still often it is due to neglect of mouth hygiene. A weak solution of fluid extract of ipecac, two drops in a half glass of water, used as a mouth wash before retiring, is another preventive, and perhaps a cure, in the earliest stages of this trouble.

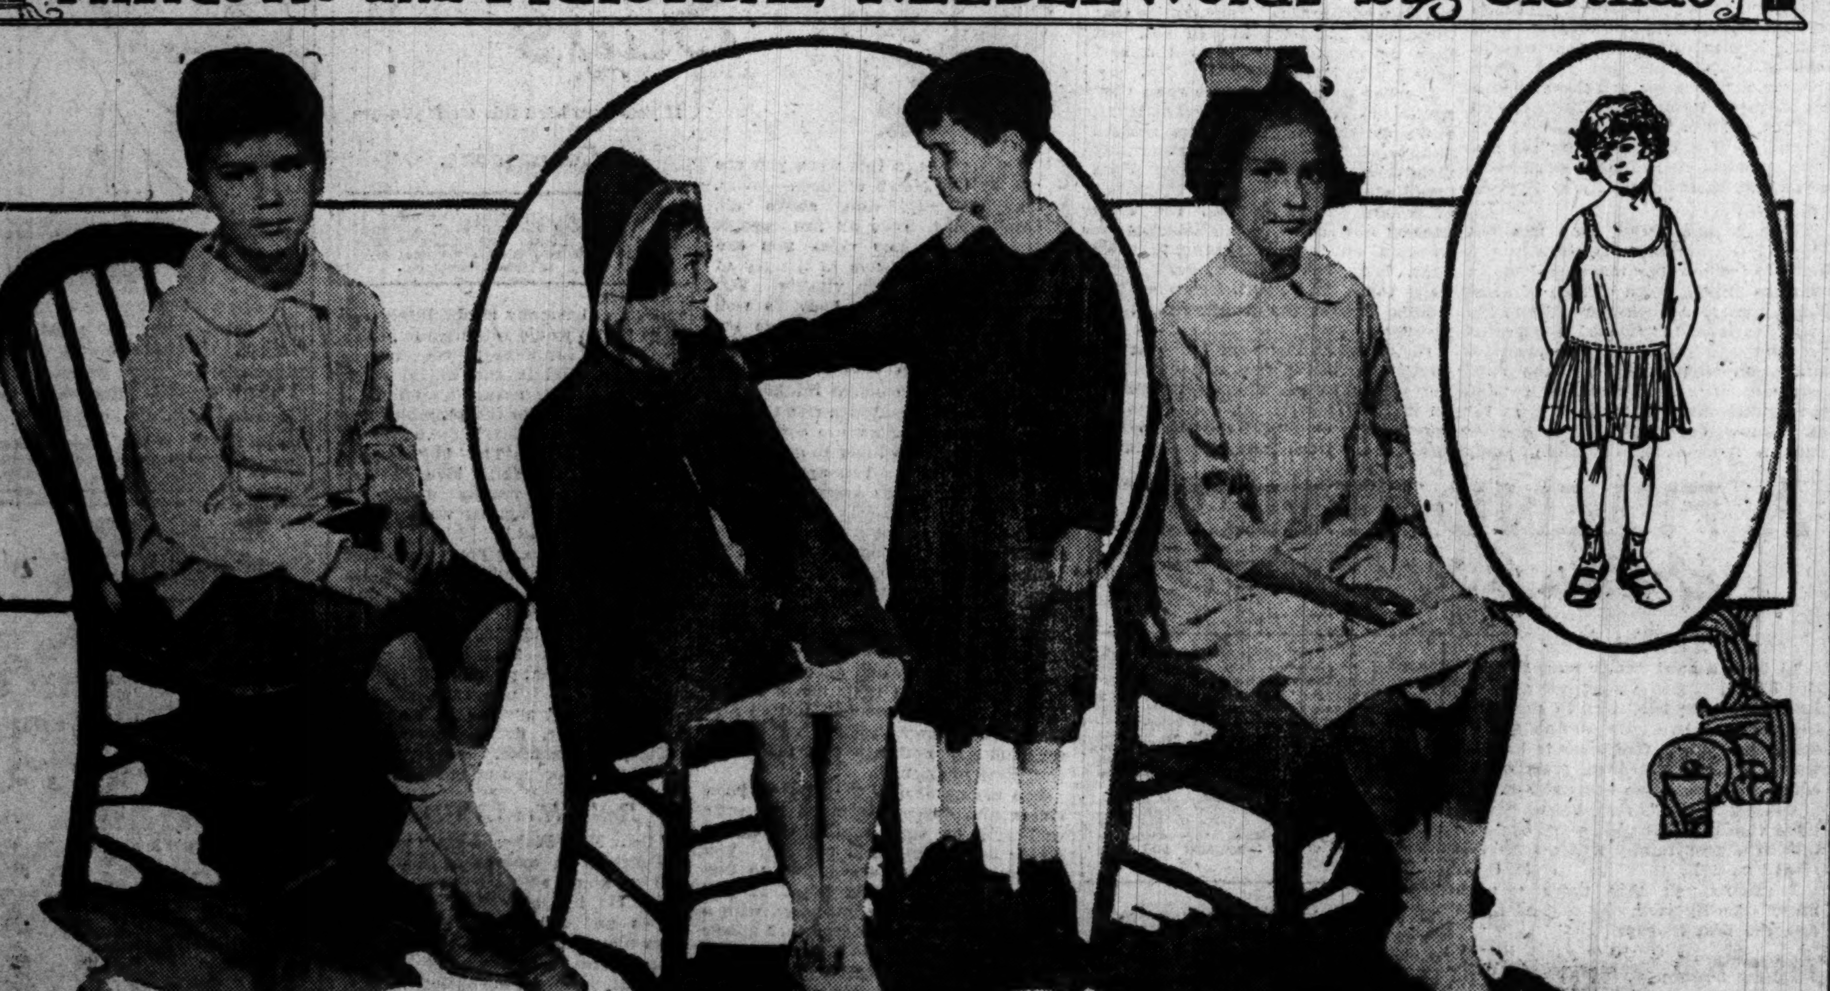
H. D.: INDIGESTION OFTEN causes a red nose, also disturbances of the inside of the nose will cause this difficulty. It improves with improved digestion. Again, it may be hereditary or the result of chronic acne. Avoid the use of hot towels on the face, as they tend to enlarge the blood vessels. I think if you are careful to keep yourself free from constipation by drinking lots of water and eating plenty of fruit and vegetables you will overcome this trouble in no time.

PATRIOTIC and PRACTICAL NEEDLEWORK by Clotilde



FOR THE REFUGEE CHILDREN.

The war has created many needs, and one of the most urgent is the clothing for refugee children. These are the ones who have suffered most, their young minds too early clouded with sorrow and fear. For this reason more than any other a uniform pattern of dress has been chosen, that they may not have to endure the strangeness and timidity caused by styles foreign to them.

The patterns require no particular sort of goods; any material can be used, but the warmer cloths are preferred. They come in all sizes from 4 to 12 years of age, and may be divided into three classes—those for boys, those for girls, and those which are for both boys and girls.

Under the last class come the hooded cape and the apron. The cape seems to be just the sort that we remember Red Riding Hood having worn when she met the wolf. It is made of warm, woolly goods, and fastens with a flap at the neck. The hood may be worn on the head or thrown back on the shoulders. The apron must be of some dark material, preferably black. Across the back, where it is fastened, a belt is loosely buttoned, and in the front are two pockets.

The only difference in the costume of the French boy and that of our own is that the blouse is belted at the bottom and hangs outside the small trousers.

Two garments are solely for the girls, the dress buttoning in the front, belted, and topped with an Eton collar, and the petticoat. The one pictured here is of outing flannel, attached to a waist of unbleached muslin. It is buttoned down the back, and fastens with three buttons.

These patterns may be obtained at the American Fund for French Wounded, 60 East Washington street, Chicago, and they are numbered as follows: Apron, No. 99; petticoat, No. 103; boys' trousers and blouse, No. 105; cape, No. 106, and girls' dress, No. 507. These patterns are 10 cents each.

A SOLDIER'S MOTHER IN FRANCE

BY RHETA CHILDE DORR

FRANCE'S NEW WOMEN.

THE long distance gun which has been bombarding Paris has not terrorized the civil population, as the Germans intended. I was in and out of the city for a month after the gun began to do its deadly work, and I can attest to that fact. But I remember three occasions when the wrath of the Parisians rose to such a height that I shuddered to think of the retribution that was piling up for Germany.

The first time was when the shell struck a historic old church, killing seventy-five Good Friday worshipers. The second was when the shell burst in a ward of a maternity hospital, making victims of mothers and newly born babes. The third time was when a factory was struck and at least seven women workers were savagely slain. The shell struck the front of the factroy, killing the head foreman, who was just leaving the place. The man was torn limb from limb.

The entire front wall of the factory crashed inward and fell upon the women seated at their work. Six were killed outright, one died on the way to the hospital, and thirty were desperately hurt. They were nearly all war widows, wives of soldiers and refugees, those slain women and their comrades in the factory.

"After the church, after the nursery, the sewing room," wrote the editor of Le Matin, "it will be said that the barbarians respect nothing." Not religion, not infancy, not womanhood.

No Panic Ensues.

What deepened the indignation in the minds of the French public was the almost sublime courage shown by the women in that factory. There was not a single moment of panic. Instantly picking themselves up, those who were unhurt began to lift out of the mass of bricks and shattered timbers the dead and wounded. They vied with one another in their calm, quick efforts to save life, and by the time the ambulances arrived all the wounded had received first aid. The next morning at the usual hour every woman except the seriously wounded reported for work. Not one stayed at home.

"France cannot spare workers now," said one woman to President Poincare, who personally visited the wrecked factory to congratulate these heroines.

Such is the metal of French wives and mothers, who have always, until this war, lived rather secluded lives within their own homes. In sheer admiration the French men, who have hitherto monopolized the higher fields of industry, and who have laughed at the idea of women in political life, are now ready to yield to any demands that women may in future put forth.

French women can probably have the vote for the asking. They have not made up their minds, in great numbers, that they want to vote. But the suffrage movement is well started, it has good leaders, women of education and social power, and there is no question as to the outcome.

Changed Their Status.

War has wrought great changes in the status of women in all the countries directly involved, and in France it has almost overturned the whole social theory. The rigid system of chaperonage of girls has been greatly relaxed.

For this the Red Cross has been responsible to a certain degree. Thousands of young women who never in their lives before saw a man except in the presence of their mothers now work in station canteens at all hours of the day and night, cooking, serving, feeding soldiers and refugees, waiting on the sick and weary with tireless devotion.

The educated women of France have gone in for hospital nursing as never before. No part of unpreparedness in France was more serious than the neglect of the nursing profession. Formerly almost all nursing was done by the religious orders, and to tell the truth, it was not very scientific nursing. If a sister happened to be a born nurse, so much the better. Not every sister was, and even the best of them were untrained in the modern sense.

Became Good Nurses.

But when the religious orders were broken up in France little or nothing was publicly done to replace the nurses. I visited a house in Paris, a sort of nurses' settlement, where for some years a highly educated and philanthropic woman has maintained a small training school of her own.

This woman, whose name, unfortunately, has slipped my memory, lives and works in a crowded quarter of the city where there is much tuberculosis. She established her nurses' training school in connection with her tuberculosis work, which is extensive. She induced a number of educated girls to take up nursing, and many of them in 1914 went into war work. But they were a drop in the bucket. They were dozens where thousands were needed. So the women had to leave their homes, as our leisured women will have to, if this war outlasts 1918, and made themselves capable and devoted trained nurses.

Race of New Women.

These are the new women of France, and it would be extraordinary if, after finding freedom from the old restrictions and conventions, they should ever go back to the old ways. I met several women who were as emancipated as any young American feminist and who seemed happy in their new independence.

At Aix-les-Bains, where our soldiers went for their first vacation leaves, there was a young girl who was an almost startling example. She was about 20 years old and pretty, in a delicate, patrician way. Before the war this girl would never have gone out of the house unattended. She had been educated in a private school with girls of her own social class, and but for the war would have been married by this time to a man chosen for her in the family council.

Now she was driving her own little Ford ambulance car for the benefit of the American soldiers. She had joined the American Y. M. C. A., wore its becoming gray and blue uniform, with a boy's soft hat pulled down over her bobbed black hair, and she was as busy as a maternal little wren.

Doughboys' Idol.

Mlle. Marcelle spoke English quaintly but fluently, but she was not a very conversational young person. She was grave and very dignified, and she loved all American soldiers too much to favor any one very much. They treated her like a princess and were ready any minute to clean the car, or oil it, or spend half a day doing things to its insides.

She was a charming little creature, Mlle. Marcelle. My son confided in me one evening that he didn't think he would have to look farther for his life's ideal, but then, so did at least a dozen other doughboys, so I considered his chances rather slim.

Even before the war the position of the French girl showed signs of change. The quality of their education had immensely improved, and in fact was practically the same as that of boys. Co-education was unknown in the schools and in higher institutions, but in the Sorbonne, the oldest of all French universities, men and women attended the same lectures.

There have been individual parents who desired the fullest freedom for their daughters, and who educated them for the professions. There are not many women doctors in France, but the woman lawyer is highly respected and even encouraged.

These changes in the status of women are going to be very good for France and her people. Already one sees their broadening effect. In the old days the French showed a certain lack of hospitality to strangers. You had to be very well known to a French family before you were invited to visit the house. This is the real reason why the French have been so little understood.

Homes Are Open.

It has been said of them that they had no word for home, hence they must be less domestic than other people. They have a word for home. It is "foyer," which means literally hearth. The family hearth was to them so sacred that they couldn't bring themselves to admit foreigners there.

That, too, is changing. Not only middle class people but people of wealth are opening their homes, especially to Americans. I received the most unexpected invitations to the home of almost strangers. One woman of prominence whom I met for the first time told me that she had a country house in Brittany which she wanted to place at the disposal of American soldiers this summer.

"I have lost several near relatives in the war," she said, "and it would be a consolation to me to feel that I was doing something for the ally that come in time to save our France from perishing. I want to know the American young man. If your son should be so unfortunate as to be wounded I hope I can take him to my house for his convalescence. I would gladly receive him and any of the American soldiers."

The kaiser's atrocious war, meant to crush and alienate and enslave the English, French, and Americans, has had quite another effect. It has brought us into new and noble friendship. It has forged ties that never will be broken.

WEEKLY PLANTING BULLETIN.

Sow or plant now in the garden: Chervil, midsummer (icicle) radishes, early turnips (tomorrow last chance).

Transplant now from the nursery bed or plant boughten seedling plants: Winter endive.

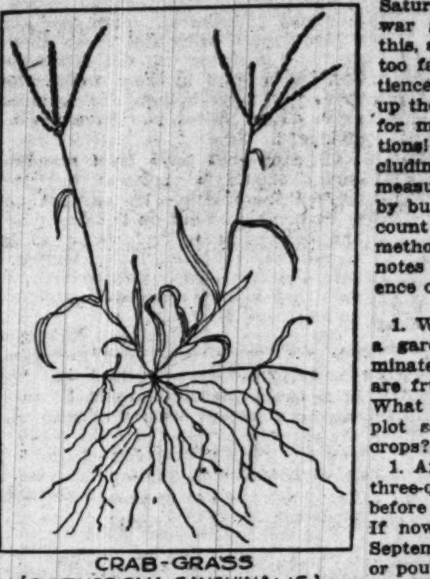
ERADICATING CRAB GRASS.

THOUGH most abundant throughout the cotton belt, so many letters have been received from gardeners of the northern states, inquiring about the means and ways of eradicating crab grass that a discussion seems warranted. It thrives throughout the United States, particularly in moist ground, in cultivated fields, gardens, and lawns. It is particularly troublesome in lawns and hoed crops because pieces scattered by the hoe and lawn mower will take root on contact with the soil and so increase the pest.



CRAB-GRASS (SYNTHERISMA SANGUINALIS)

It is a nutritious grass, but difficult to cure, and yields usually only one-half to one and one-half tons of hay per acre. It springs up spontaneously, especially in wet seasons, on land prepared in spring and then left undisturbed.

It is an annual, known also as finger grass, Polish millet, purple crab grass, and large crab grass. Its slender palms grow to a height of one to four feet with three to five or more spikes of seed arranged at the top like so many fingers. It is decumbent or creeping at the base, and strikes root wherever a joint comes in contact with moist ground. The Poles use the seed like sago, cooked in milk.

Crab grass seeds from August to October. If never permitted to go to seed it can be successfully eradicated in two to three years by careful hand pulling. Uprooted plants and parts must be promptly destroyed by fire or consigned to the compost heap.

The small or smooth crab grass differs from the preceding only in size and color. It does not exceed twelve to eighteen inches in height, and is entirely reddish. It is less troublesome, as persistent prevention of seed or even a good stand of better grasses and clovers will readily smother it out.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Last week I harvested my cauliflower on bed No. 6 and cabbage on bed No. 8. Now I have two empty beds. What can I plant on them. I have a nice garden and everything is in good condition.

Mrs. D. R. and Others.

There are many kinds of soil in this vicinity, some maturing crops as much as two weeks faster than others. The war garden work, as described in the Saturday issue and demonstrated in war gardens, is planned to equalize this, a little slow for some and a little too fast for others. Have a little patience. It would be confusing to write up the work separately for sandy soil, for muck, and for clay. Congratulations! Send in a picture of it, including the gardener, and be sure to measure all the produce as harvested, by bushel, peck, and quart. Keep account of the varieties and cultural methods used, that we may compare notes later and profit from the experience of others.

1. When is the best time to spade up a garden plot? 2. What will exterminate gophers? 3. What time of year are fruit and shade trees pruned? 4. What vegetables would you plant in a plot say 15x20 feet for rotation of crops?

M. E. L.

1. After leveling and spreading three-quarters inch of stable manure before the ground freezes in autumn. If now in grass, turn that under in September and if possible give pigs or poultry the run of the ground while spading or plowing to clean out insect pests that infest grass plots. A month or so later spread the manure and turn it once more to the depth of the spade blade. If the top soil does not extend that far, turn only eight inches. In spring fork it over once more before making beds and paths in preparation for planting.

2. Grain, pieces of potato, or raisins poisoned with strychnine; special gopher traps, or carbon bisulphide gas. See answer to Mrs. M. E. H., article No. 111, Sunday, June 23.

3. Stone fruit, in early spring before sap flows; all others from late fall till early spring. Don't omit spraying with lime-sulphur after pruning and destroy the prunings at once by fire.

4. Use the standard four foot bed in so small a garden, each fifteen feet long and divided at the middle. Five such beds, with a one foot path between will amount to twenty-four feet. Consult THE TRIBUNE war garden plan of March 12, article No. 10, and select your beds to suit individual preference, adopting the rotation there given for each.

ETIQUETTE by ELIZABETH VAN RENSSELAER

> Any question on etiquette will be answered if you write to Elizabeth Van Rensselaer, "Chicago Sunday Tribune." If you wish a personal reply, inclose a stamped, addressed envelope.

ACKNOWLEDGING INTRODUCTIONS.

IT is surprising to see how many young people balk at getting up from a comfortable chair or divan when some other young person is presented to them. They will rise prettily if an older man or woman speaks or is introduced to them, but if it is a boy or girl whom some kind friend wishes them to know they are all too apt to remain seated in what might be interpreted as an attitude of indifference or indolence.

There is nothing undignified in standing up during an introduction; in fact, there is in that little act of courtesy a cordial graciousness that fills it with dignity.

Acknowledging introductions simply, gracefully, and naturally is one of the best ways to make a charming first impression, and the young man or woman who has acquired the art and is constantly on the alert to practice it is sure to find life's path more smooth and pleasant than does he who has neglected these seemingly minor points of daily etiquette.

R. T. W.: Although it does not harm to smile and wave at boys in uniform when you are in a motor and well chaperoned—often such a greeting cheers them up if they are far from home and lonely—it is not wise to speak and flirt with every one in service whom you see. It is the girls and women who are guilty of actions like these who help lower the morale of our army and navy.

MRS. S. F. F.: If you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope I shall be happy to send you a list of reliable books on etiquette.

* *

E. B. D.: A girl of 18 may have "Miss" on her calling cards if she wishes. The customary size for such cards is about one and three-quarter inches by two and three-quarter inches. When a boy is introduced to a girl she need only smile and say, "How do you do, Mr. Smith?" "Pleased to meet you" and "Glad to have met you" are really not correct.

* *

N. O. Y.: It is customary for the bride to give her maid of honor a small gift of a personal and lasting character, such as a piece of jewelry, a vanity case, or any of the little things women use and like.

* *

T. P. D.: The following menu is a good one for a war luncheon: Creamed chicken, green peas, potatoes au gratin, corn muffins, iced tea, head lettuce with Russian dressing, an ice, and war cake.

POSLAM PROVES PACIFYING BALM TO ITCHY SKIN

Try Poslam for any bad case of Eczema, particularly when nothing else seems to help and the itching is almost intolerable.

Poslam is so active, stops itching so quickly, that it does away with much uncertainty.

This directness — this getting right at the trouble—is a quality exclusive in Poslam. Poslam possesses healing energy in such concentrated form that one ounce of Poslam is worth a pound of ointments less efficient. Use it to drive away any eruptional disturbance of the skin.

Best Home Treatment for All Hairy Growths

(The Modern Beauty)

Every woman should have a small package of Delatone handy, for its timely use will keep the skin free from beauty-marring hairy growths. To remove hair or fuzz, make a thick paste with some of the powdered Delatone and water. Apply to hairy surface and after 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and it will be free from hair or blemish. To avoid disappointment, be sure you get real delatone. —Advertisement.

Write To day Free Book

MANDEL BROTHERS' FASHION BOOKS for years have been accepted as guides by the women of the middle west, and the book for the coming season will be eagerly sought by all women who want to be correctly informed on styles. The edition of this fall's book is limited, owing to the scarcity of print paper, and for that reason we advise all who do not want to miss getting our Fall Fashion Book to send us their request for it at once—TODAY if possible. In former years we have had to print a second—and quite often a third—edition of our Fashion Books to supply the demand of all who wrote for it after the first edition had been exhausted, but this year we fear that there will be no possibility of publishing any more editions than the first, because conditions in the paper industry will not permit us to do so. Remember, too, that all requests are placed in the order in which they are received—the sooner you write the sooner you will receive your Fashion Book.

Sent Free Upon Request—Write Today

Mandel Brothers' fashion books are different and serve a higher purpose than the ordinary catalogs. Our fashion books are, in a large measure, an extension of our splendid retail service to our out-of-town customers. The garments shown in our books are selected by the same efficient corps of buyers who select the beautiful garments shown in our retail establishment. Every woman who wants to keep closely in touch with the latest in fashion cannot afford to be without Mandel's fashion books. And yet our books serve not only in the matter of fashions but also offer splendid money-saving opportunities in all that is needed in clothing and furnishing for every one in the family—men, women, boys, girls, children. You will also find in this fall's book exceptional offerings in the newest Silks, Dress Goods, Coatings, etc., as well as draperies and other features interesting to every woman who seeks the best.

Fill one of these coupons today and mail it to us. Give the other three coupons to your neighbors and friends, who will thank you for giving them this opportunity of obtaining Mandel Brothers' Fall Fashion Book FREE. If you send us an order for any of the articles advertised on this page you need not use a coupon to request the Fall Book, because your purchase will place you on our lists at once and you will receive a Fashion Book free. You may, instead, give the extra coupon to a friend or neighbor, who will be greatly pleased of this opportunity to send for the Fashion Book.

A Few Examples of the Values Offered in Our Fall Fashion Book

We have taken these few items at random from our Fall Fashion Book to give you an idea of the values offered in this book. We might say further, that we have anticipated the probable stringency in the merchandise markets this coming fall and winter by buying immense quantities of every number shown in our fall fashion book. These items are in stock now and you may order them today if you desire. We also advise all of our patrons that it would be advantageous to buy all supplies of wearing apparel as early as possible this fall—first, because it is becoming more and more apparent that there will most likely be a shortage in the wholesale markets, and, secondly, because this shortage will most likely result in radical price increases. To supply your needs early this season is to invest wisely.

Mid-Summer Items of the Shows and Showmen

Percy Mackaye has written and Arthur Hopkins will produce a play called "Washington, the Man Who Made Us," dealing with the days and characters of the American revolution. Though Mr. Mackaye is a poet, the drama is in prose, and it is divided into sixteen "actions" and fourteen "transitions." Among these are shown Washington paying court to Martha Custis, Washington crossing the Delaware, Washington freezing at Valley Forge, and the unfurling of Betsy Ross' first flag. Robert Edmond Jones, decorator of the impending "Garden of Paradise," will design the scenes and costumes.

From Miss Laurette Taylor's diary of the Red Cross "Out There" tour: "Pittsburgh—It was so warm that Mrs. Fiske found sufficient excuse to push her desire for solitude to extreme limits. We searched the theater for her without results, but at last discovered her on the roof. She was dressing on the roof. She is a most feminine, darling person, and why she withdraws her gentle self from us is a Sam Lloyd puzzle. Good-by, Mrs. Fiske, I know now how Dante felt at never knowing Beatrice."

In the dramatization of Mrs. Rinehart's war tale, "The Amazing Interlude," Miss Marie Doro will impersonate the ineffable Saralee, who served soup to the soldiers and fell in love with the Belgian spy.

The plans of John D. Williams contemplate these productions for the coming season:

Oscar Wilde's "An Ideal Husband," with Norman Trevor, Cyril Harcourt, Constance Collier, and Beatrice Beckley.

Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead."

"Beyond the Horizon," by Eugene O'Neill.

"All Souls' Eve," by Anne Crawford Flexner.

"The Song of the City," by Rachel Butler.

A play of western life in '49, by Augustus Thomas.

George C. Tyler is arranging to present the following:

"Among Those Present," with Cyril Keightley, A. E. Anson, Hassard Short, W. B. Mack, and Marjorie Patterson.

"Sawdust and Sentiment," by L. B. Yates.

"All Wrong," a dramatisation of William S. McNutt's "A Burglar's Feelings," by W. H. Post.

Laurette Taylor in "Happiness."

George Arliss in "Hamilton."

Alexandre Carlisle in "A Country Cousin," formerly "The Ohio Lady," beginning here on Labor day.

Booth Tarkington's "Penrod."

William A. Brady announces the following enterprises:

"I. O. U.," by Willard Mack and Hector Turnbull, with Mary Nash.

Alice Brady in "Forever After," by Owen Davis.

"The Chinese Puzzle," by Marion Bower and Leon Lion, now playing in London.

"Human Nature," by Owen Davis.

The Frohman company has obtained the American rights to "Nurse Benson," in which Miss Marie Lohr is playing in London.

Glen MacDonough and Reginald De Koven have delivered a musical play named "Yesterday" to the Messrs. Shubert.

After Fiske O'Hara's engagement at the Olympic in "Marry in Haste," Messrs. Smith and Golden will present "Turn to the Right" again, beginning Aug. 25. The cast will include Jason Robards, Joe Smith Marba, Mabel Bert, Helen Collier, Barry McCormack, and Jessie Glendinning.

"Oh Look!" which will open the La Salle's season Tuesday night is James Montgomery's farce, "Ready Money," set to verse and music by Joseph McCarthy and Harry Caroll. The songs include "It's a Long Road to Peacock's," "Carolina," "A Kiss for Cinderella," "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows," "I Don't Remember Now," and "Do You Want to Marry?"

Mr. Tinney, though his leg is broken and he has had trouble with the Shuberts, retains his sense of humor. He appeared at the Palace last night on two crutches, one labeled "Lee," the other "Jake," and the box which inclosed his wounded member was inscribed "A Typical Morosco Cast."

Marc Klaw is explicably inconsolable over the hostile attitude of the congressional tax-layers toward the theater. They propose to double the levy on theater seats. "It looks to me," says Mr. Klaw, "as if congress, despite all the valuable aid given by the theaters to the various war activities, is bent on legislating us out of existence. With the advance in railroad fares, the penalty on sleeping car tickets, which no theatrical company can avoid; the doubling of the license, and the 100 per cent increase in the tax on the public, they are killing the goose that lays the golden eggs."

* * *

Another falsetto item has been added to our effeminate battle hymnology. It is named "Hello, Central, Give Me No Man's Land," and its contents are worse than its caption indicates. It seems that the only literate he-songs inspired by this war are Mr. Cohan's "Over There," Mr. Carpenter's "Khaki Sammy" and "The Long, Long Trail," a sad hymn but a brave one.

It may be said for the Marines that they do not sing "America, Here's My Boy," or "A Baby's Prayer at Twilight for Its Dadda Over There." In army and navy garrisons hard-by Chicago such mincing castrata are to be heard; but never in the barracks of the "devil-dogs." The musical outcries of these soldiers are male, and though they may be rough, they sound of bristles and bowels rather than of slaps upon the wrist. The captain who heard his men singing "And if I had another he'd march beside his brother," and does not interfere, is suspect; and his function is in a harem, not an army.

An imposing coterie of dramatic eleemosynaries are in Chicago preliminary to the production of "The Garden of Paradise" at the Studebaker Aug. 12. Besides the noteworthy troupe of actors and actresses we have with us Mr. Sheldon, the author. Mr. Janney, the impresario; Mrs. Norman Hapgood, the general scrutator; Mr. Eagle, the stage director, and Mr. Robert Edward Jones, the scene painter and dress designer.

Had it not been for the patriotic generosity of A. H. Woods, the New York showman, the soldiers and sailors of the barracks adjacent to Chicago would be without free entertainment today. "Friendly Enemies," though it has been performed previously for the army and the navy, will be played again this afternoon at the Woods, and men in uniform will be more than welcome.

Secretary Baker makes this announcement concerning Smileage:

"The nation-wide Smileage sale is a contribution from the people of the United States to the contentment, effectiveness, and future usefulness of our soldiers. It is a part of the great effort the government is making to surround our soldiers with wholesome environment. It is an important part of the work of the commission on training camp activities."

Banks and stores in 5,000 towns are now handling the sale of Smileage, but if you wish to send a book of smiles to a soldier, and you are not in touch with one of these, write to Harold Braddock, director of Smileage, war department commission on training camp activities, Washington.

In order to overcome railroad difficulties in routing shows over the Liberty circuit, Mr. A. G. Simmons, assistant general passenger agent of the Lehigh Valley railroad (the very best man for the job) has been assigned to act as railroad traffic counselor to the war department commission on training camp activities. He will be located in the New York office of the commission at 1520 Broadway.

* * *

"Seven Days' Leave," imminent at the Garrick, is a British melodrama of the war, showing in its animated procedure the gun deck of an American cruiser, United States troops dedicating a shrine in an English churchyard, and other magnetic episodes appropriate to the time. In it there is a German spy, who steals the plans of the fortifications, and Lady Mary Heather, an intrepid Englishwoman, swimming far out at sea to thwart such villains as may be current in the secret service of the Teutonic powers. The play begins Sept. 1.

Lew Fields, running true to gossip, is about to enter one of the "Friendly Enemies" troupes, but Mr. Weber has refused to bear out the prognosticators and will continue as an impresario. The Fields company, with Charles Winninger in the Sam Bernard rôle, will open in Boston the last week of this month. Plans for a purposed Weber-Fields return in musical comedy have accordingly been abandoned.

* * *

Charles Dillingham, F. Ziegfeld Jr., and Messrs. Klaw and Erlanger have formed a producing affiliation to undertake theatrical projects in a big way. Raymond Hitchcock will be one of their stars.

Mr. Kaufman in the New York Times today says that Mr. Hitchcock, even in the palmy days of the first "Hitchy-Koo," was not accumulating funds as he should have been. Good natured, generous, and always a good fellow, Mr. Hitchcock paid his people the salaries they asked—an error of which the commercial manager is rarely guilty—and so made only a fraction of the fortune which should have been his.

That fortune he promptly invested in two bad musical productions and a lease of a theater; and the combination not only obliterated all the "Hitchy-Koo" profits but plunged the actor deeply into debt. The seventeen weeks during which he was the lessee of the Fulton theater in New York were seventeen weeks of loss. Notwithstanding the fact that economy had become a necessity by the time the second "Hitchy-Koo" was produced, Mr. Hitchcock put that entertainment together with an improvidence even greater than that which had characterized his previous productions. An instance of this is the fact that he agreed to pay Leon Errol $1,500 weekly—$1,000 for his services as an actor and $500 weekly for his labors in staging the piece. A stage director is commonly paid a salary only during the weeks of rehearsal.

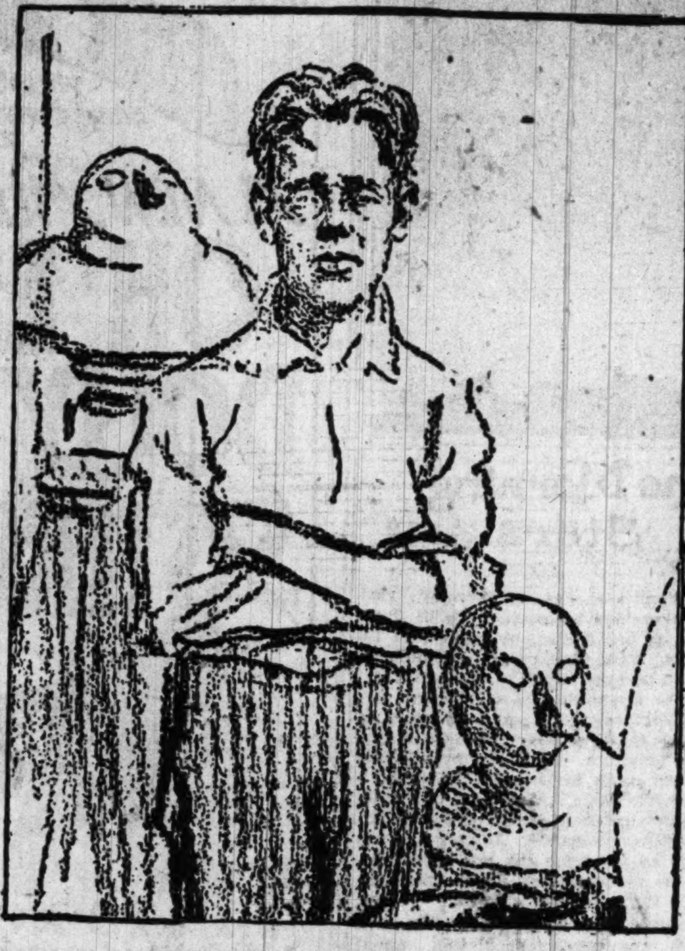
The scale on which the 1918 "Hitchy-Koo" was produced, in fact, brought the weekly cost of operation to about $13,000. Discounting the matinées, which are rarely played to capacity in the case of a musical show, the piece could draw some $14,000 by crowding the house every night. This slight margin of $1,000 had, of course, to be applied on the original cost of production, and even at this rate it would have required many weeks for the return of the original investment. The week before last there occurred the hot weather, which caused the weekly receipts to drop to $9,000, and in the absence of a reserve fund the recourse to K. & E. became inevitable.

Mr. Hitchcock's difficulty with Mr. Errol was entirely independent of this major ailment. The agreement between the two regarding the manner in which Mr. Errol should be advertised was at the root of the trouble, and inasmuch as there was no prospect of agreement on the question it seemed wise for the pair to separate. Matters never reached a critical point between the two, and during the last week—the show's final one in its present form—the pair continued to share the star dressing room in all amicability. When the piece reopens in Boston late in the month, however, Mr. Errol will be among those missing.

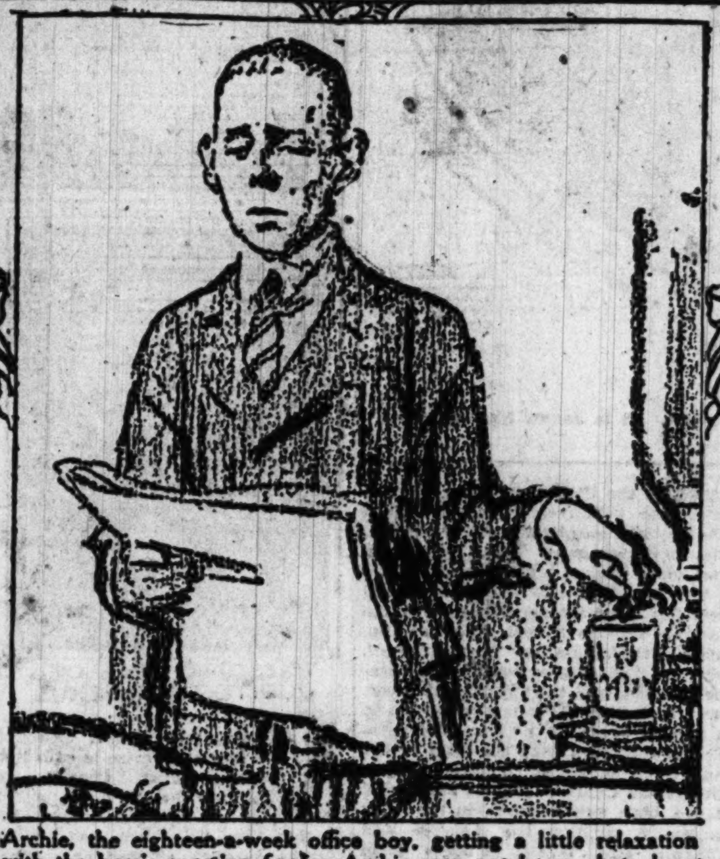
AMONG US MORTALS

SOME WAR PORTRAITS

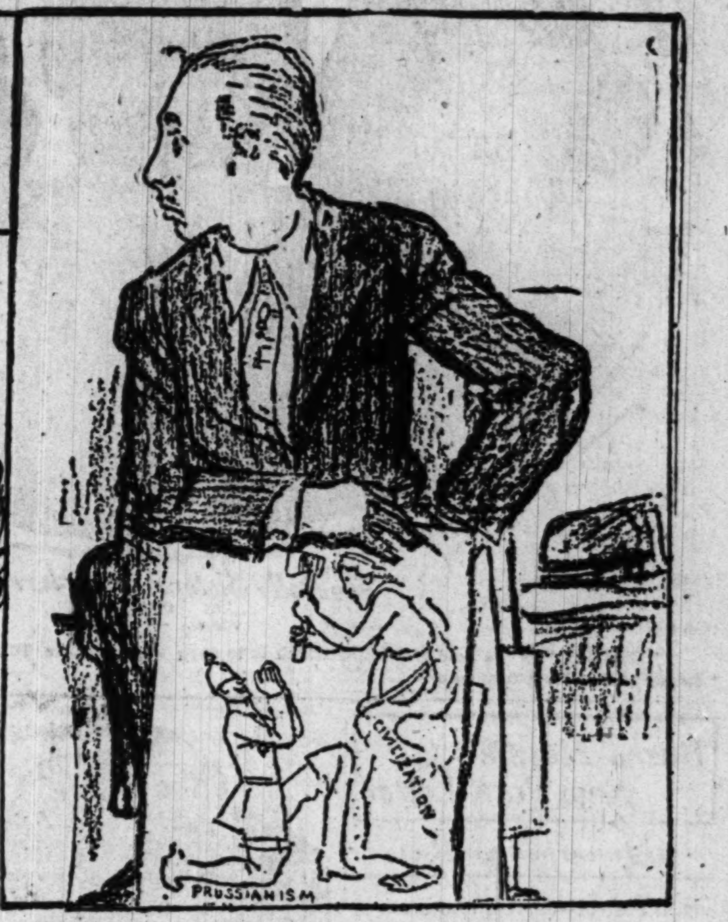
By W. E. HILL



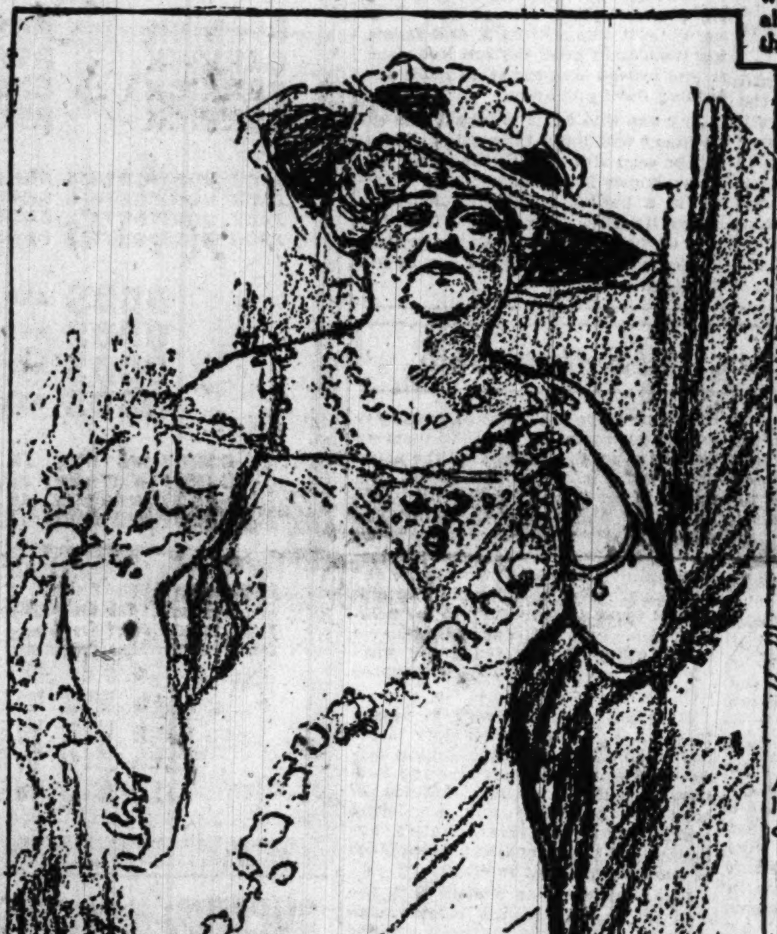
Francis Finch, who does those awfully clever modern art portrait busts, has offered his services to an army hospital in case any wounded soldiers' faces need remodelling. Says Francis, "This war is beginning to 'get me' (likewise the draft) and I wanna do something!"



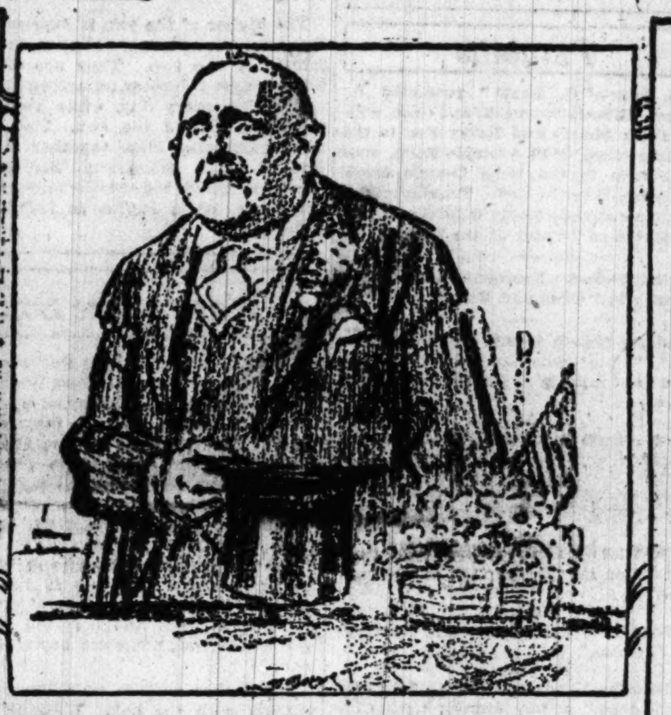
Archie, the eighteen-a-week office boy, getting a little relaxation with the boss's sporting final. Archie may not be much to brag about around an office, but he can't be drafted for five years, and that's something



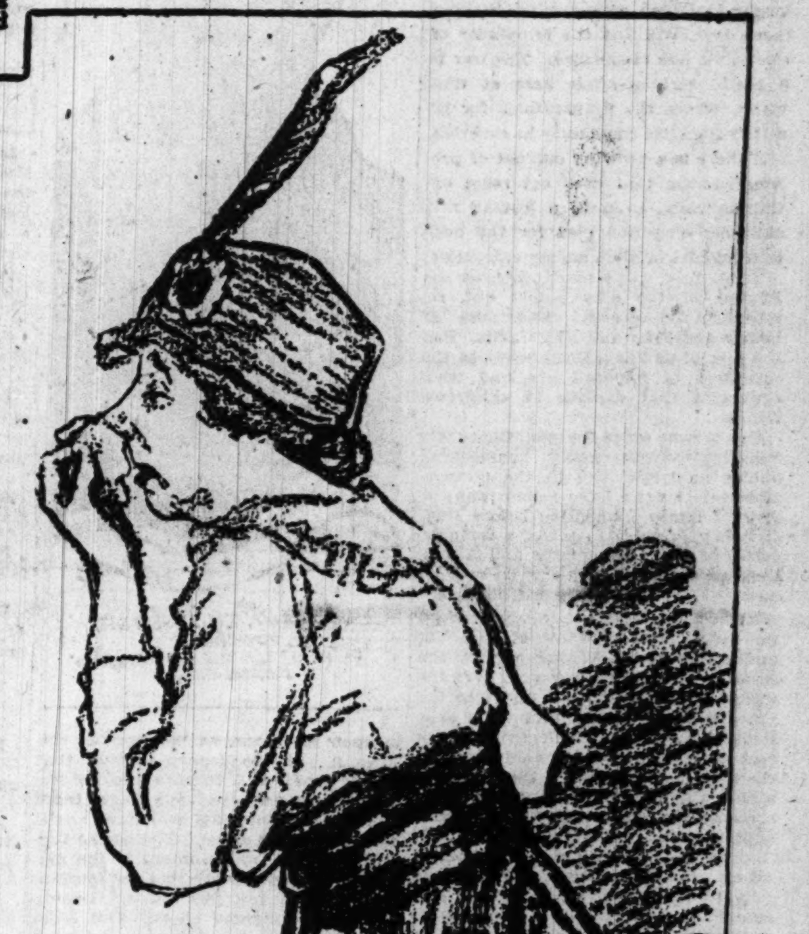
The patriotic Lambert Cuffe, who hopes to be sent over as the American "Bairnsfather," making a call on the War Department



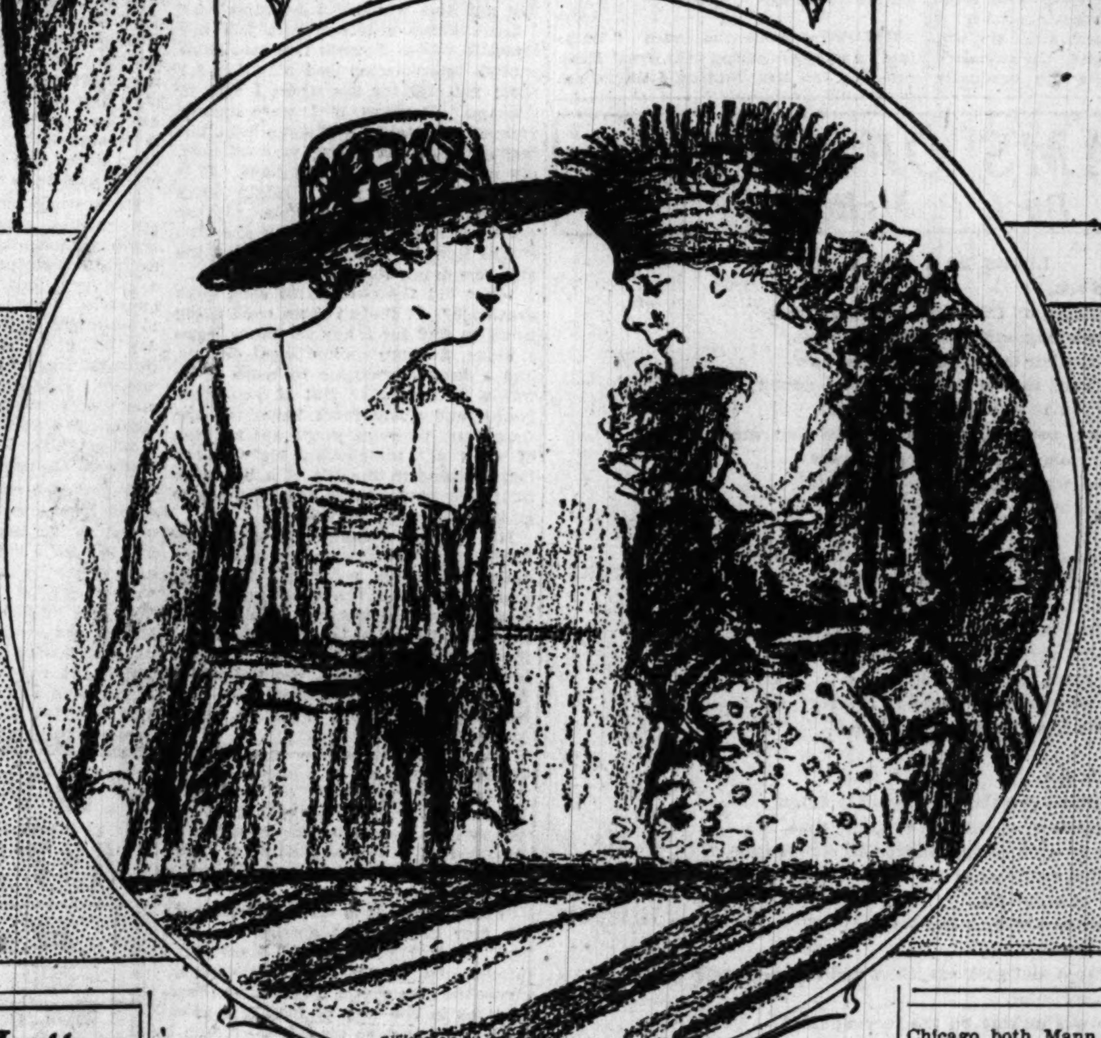
The sentimental Miss Sniffin, who never does anything by halves, weeping quarts after presenting a doughboy with a rose to take to France. Much more soul satisfying—to Miss Sniffin—than a package of cigarettes or a cake of chocolate



Alderman Link at the patriotic parade trying to combine a look of calm exaltation with the dignified nobility of a Lincoln or a Washington for the benefit of the movie camera



Among those whom the war has hit hardest is Mrs. Minnie Kraus, widow of a multi-millionaire brewer, who for years had been slowly battering her way into the Four Hundred A group photograph, with Minnie and the Crown Prince in front (for use in the home society columns) was expected to do it—then came the war and spoiled everything!



Two ladies in the reviewing stand of the patriotic parade, who prefer profile to full face, have spotted a newspaper photographer

Burns Mantle's New York Letter

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Now the story comes out. Albert Herman Woods, showman, is the real cause of the "Friendly Enemies" furore. Sam Bernard and Louis Mann are mere lay figures with laughs up their sleeves. It was Mr. Woods who discovered and encouraged the writing of the play. It was Woods who cast it and produced it. It was Woods who outlined the advertising campaign that has kept the alleged enmities of the two stars the subject of trivial but persistent discussion in the newspapers. It was Woods who arranged with the speculators to take over $60,000 worth of the best seats for the first eight weeks of the New York run, which has just begun. And it is Woods who will profit to the extent of a fortune or two from the success.

And on just how trivial an incident do you suppose the injection of the Woods personality into the proceedings rested? On a missed bowl of soup! On a luncheon at the Knickerbocker he had planned to eat and did not eat! As he entered the grill room he met one of the authors of the play, had his curiosity piqued, and his jealousy subconsciously stirred by the latter's statement that he was about to sell the idea to a rival manager, and immediately lost his appetite.

This was last January. Bernard and Samuel Shipman, who wrote the comedy with Aaron Hoffman, were fortifying themselves with food against the test of a meeting with Arthur Hopkins. Hopkins, regarded in the profession as a highbrow, is suspected of not caring a great deal for German comedians or dialect comedy. The Hopkins appointment was for 2 o'clock. It was then 1:30. "Tell me about the play," suggested Woods. "We will, if Hopkins doesn't like it," said Shipman. "Tell me now," insisted Woods; "it isn't 2 yet." "You haven't had your lunch," suggested Bernard. "I don't want any lunch," declared Woods.

So they went down to the Woods offices, which are practically next door to those of Hopkins, and there the plot of what became "Friendly Enemies" was outlined—and tentatively sold.

At 2 Shipman rushed over to keep his Hopkins appointment. He found Arthur missing. He might be on his way back, but the phone clerk thought he probably was playing golf. Shipman didn't wait. One manager in the hand is worth a dozen on the links. Back he rushed to the Woods office. Louis Mann had joined the party. Woods agreed to take the play and pay the customary advance royalties. The comedians, who were tied up with vaudeville contracts, insisted it had to be written in a hurry. Shipman thereupon asked for a collaborator. Aaron Hoffmann was agreed upon.

Shipman and Hoffman went to Atlantic City and the play was written in two weeks—five days is the actual time spent on it, they say. Three weeks later it was produced and pronounced fit. Before it was taken to Chicago both Mann and Bernard accepted 25 per cent of the profits of the company in which they were appearing, with a minimum salary guarantee. Bernard was so excited he bought a 12½ per cent interest in the production, whoever played it. That investment alone will make him a rich man. A richer man, perhaps we should say, seeing that he is already pretty well established financially. German comedians being a glut on the present wartime market, Woods will have his pick of the field with which to furnish forth four or five "Friendly Enemies" companies the coming winter. It will be one of those "quick clean-ups" on which Broadway Country club members love to expatiate.

During its first week in New York "Friendly Enemies" has equaled its first success in Chicago. The audiences have been huge, despite the heat. It was a bigger first week than "Potash & Perlmutter," another of the Woods' inspirations, enjoyed.

Also the comedians have been generously interviewed on their love and admiration for each other. One interviewer found them set for the ordeal with Louis' arm around Sam's shoulder. Another tried his best to get them to talk of other things, but found them intent on the subjects agreed upon, Mann's superior acting and Bernard's wonderful comedy.

Their first night receptions were duly timed. Each entered singing, that the audience might be prepared for his coming. Louis was never more ardent in the enthusiasm of his love for Sam. He hugged him and shook him, and threatened frequently to kiss him. And Sam smiled through his perspiration and his grease paint as though he was extremely grateful. Still the report persists that off stage they will have none of each other. It doesn't matter which report is true. So long as they can keep one or the other going they will be content—because they share in the profits.

We have a feeling, however, that the story of the hyphenates who were converted by the war, once it has passed the personal followings of the popular comedians, and the sympathetic but discreet pro-German crowd that every large American community harbors these days, will find the remainder of the public less responsive. The war is a pretty serious affair here at tidewater, where the preparations for its carrying on are constantly in evidence, and there is a growing current of pro-Americanism that does not react enthusiastically, even to a human and skillfully disguised plea for the hesitant loyalist of alien enemy extraction.

These folk, quite reasonably, as the Pfeiffer of the play points out, remember the pre-war sweetness of Heinie and Fritz and Max Gazitz. But the rest of us know them today as the inventors of mustard gas and trick souvenirs that explode in children's hands.

The prewar stage German, the cheek-pinching, word-spraying, home-loving yodler no longer fits in the picture. However, laughs have saved many a play of flimsy foundation before this, and they promise to make a fortune-getter of this one—laughs and Albert Herman Woods, showman.

During the first act, almost before the new "Passing Show of 1918" is under way at the Winter garden, the ladies of the ensemble swarm over the top of the orchestra pit and into the aisles with war saving stamps for sale. Real stamps, for which they collect real money, and for the sale of which there is a prize offered the girl who makes the best record—or will be as soon as the press department thinks of it.

POWERS'
IN "A LITTLE BIT OLD FASHIONED"
BUSHNELL-PHOTO

They are, of course, an attractive group of saleswomen. They are gowned in Quaker gray, having just completed a demure little dance enlivened at the finish with a kick that reveals their opera hose changing from gray to gay in coloring on the way north. And they are not impertinently insistent. All the aisle seaters, of course, are ready to buy from them, knowing the worthiness of the cause, and I suspect that when we get well started on the next Liberty bond drive in September they will be a well organized and useful unit.

The rest of the "Passing Show" is what might be described as a progressive duplicate of those that have preceded it. The star of the proceedings is young Willie Howard, second in popularity only to Al Jolson at the garden. A good comic and a good vocalist is Willie and a better than average imitator of other celebrities.

The scenic backing is elaborate and in spots gorgeous, as has become the custom. If the report is true that Josef Urban will furnish the decoration for the next spectacle staged there the Ziegfeld interests will have something to worry about. The scenic feature in this entertainment is the picturing of another air raid on London. The lighted city lies below. Enemy Gothas are sighted above. Out from the the wings the defenders wheel a visiting American plane, start the propellers, and send it after the invaders. As the plane rises the city gradually sinks, so the illusion of flying upward is rather effectively obtained. With the city replaced by a night cyclorama, the airplanes meet. Bang, bang, and two more Gothas bite the rooftops!

The cast is extensive, of course, and includes a goodly percentage of reputations—George Hassel, who was funniest as the burglar in "Love o' Mike"; Virginia Fox Brooks, soprano, and Isabel Rodrigues, the Spanish dancer, who adds a chile con carne twist to a Salome dance of the discarded veils. She is rewarded with the head of the kaiser on a papier maché charger. Others are Charles Ruggles and Isabel Lowe, both westerners from the stock company circuits; the Astaires and Clayton and White, dancers from vaudeville; Arthur Albro, tenor—quite a list of willing workers, in fact.

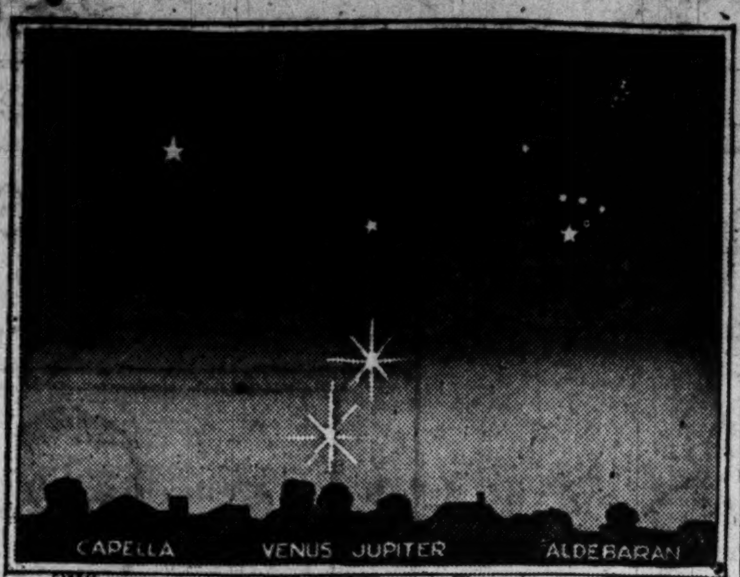
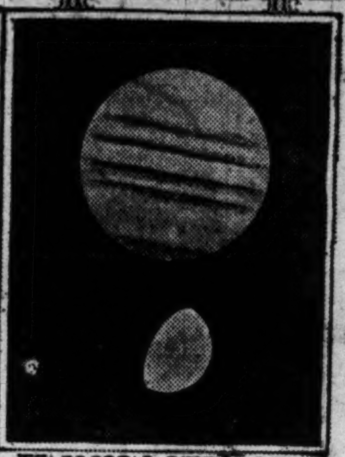
My little son,
Your sentence on this earth has just begun,
You have a long and toilsome race to run,
And it's but fair to tell you here and now
This ain't the best of worlds, no way, nohow;
Because you have it pretty soft today
You think, perhaps, 'twill always be that way,
And every one that you will ever know
Will be as good to you as Doctor Stowe,
But listen, bo,
It isn't so;
The world ain't built on no such gorgeous plan;
You'll have to be a self-assertive man,
You bet,
And fight likehel for everything you get,
And lite all spraddled out in every fray,
For life down here is not a holiday,
And he who totes the bacon to his den
Is he who has it on his fellow men.

My little son,
If you would cop the daily bread and bun
Don't figure on a soft and soothing time,
There's no such thing, believe this simple rime,
You'll find existence is
A kind of bacon-biz,
With streaks of lean and fat
And this and that,
Like gloom and gladness, salve and sop, and sting
And everything,
And people lurking on the thoroughfare
To take you in and also unaware
And bounce a brick where you divide your hair,
And friends you'll find
Of every kind,
The false and true,
And of the former lots,
The latter few,
And of your friends you'll find before you're done,
Your first will be your best and truest one,
And that friend is your mother, little son.

My little son,
The goal is far from easily won,
The road is long and hard that stretches there,
The race not to the swift but to the fair.
So play the game and play it on the square;
Then, even if the twilight of your day
Should find you with the goal still far away,
You need not care,
For better than the goal ignobly won
Is the race that's lost but still was fairly run.

ASTRONOMY





TELESCOPIC SIZES OF JUPITER AND VENUS

The Morning Stars

ANY unusually bright object in the east at sunrise is called the morning star. Capella and Sirius are the two most common stars which are seen in summer. Just at this time there are two brilliant planets as well, shining as morning stars. Their unusual magnitude makes them very conspicuous objects before dawn.

The higher of the two is Jupiter and the lower is Venus. Jupiter is the fainter of the two. They are slowly moving apart, Jupiter mounting higher and higher every day, while Venus is traveling toward the sun. The two, while appearing close together in the line of sight, are really far apart. Venus is about 138,000,000 miles from the earth, while Jupiter is 782,000,000 miles away.

A small telescope will serve to reveal the planetary characteristics of Jupiters, its broad disc, its belts, and its moons. Venus is a much more difficult object, because it has hardly one quarter the apparent size of Jupiter, but notwithstanding its small diameter, it will be three or four times as bright as its neighbor. This is because Venus is very close to the sun, being only 67,000,000 miles away, and the solar rays strike with double the strength of a midsummer sun. Jupiter is seven times as far from the sun as Venus, and so receives only about one-eighteenth the light Venus does.

Until the invention of the telescope there was much speculation about what becomes of the stars during the day. In an age when knowledge was not universal and when the very means for our most elementary proofs were often lacking, the explanation was not always accepted that they are drowned out by the more intense glare of the sun. By watching the morning stars with optical aid, picking them up while it was still dark, and following them until after the sun had risen, it was proved that the stars really are shining during the day.

Any one who cares to repeat this experiment will find it interesting. Venus can be seen all day with the naked eye if one knows just where to look. Jupiter is a harder object to follow, because its blue color blends into the blue of the sky, but with an opera glass it can be seen crossing the sky in full daylight.

Work of the Soldiers and Sailors' Club

OVER at the Central Soldiers and Sailors' club, 207 West Washington street, a uniformed boy and his father sat in big, roomy chairs. The strained silence that invariably accompanies these partings of father and uniformed son prevailed. At the desk over in a corner sat a woman in charge. Before her was a letter basket filled with mail from soldiers and sailors testifying wholeheartedly and touchingly to the fact that the Soldiers and Sailors' club is a friend in need and a friend indeed to the homeless, homesick boy on shore leave.

The father rose to go after a final parting with the boy. Walking over to the woman's desk, he said: "I'm going back down south and I'll make a woman there happier than she has been since the boy left home. She won't have to worry any more about her boy getting into wrong hands in the big city, for I'll tell her about you and this wonderful organization."

Later came a letter from the boy himself: "Dear Friend: I cannot show enough appreciation and affection for what you did for me when I was in Chicago. Perhaps if I were nearer your city I might be of some help, but seeing that I am a long way off now, my letters must take the place. If it hadn't been for you I might have caused mother to feel terrible. Mother can't get over how good you are. She thinks it wonderful what you and the club are doing for the boys."

What did the club do to earn such gratitude? It doesn't seem such a big thing to find for a boy on shore leave a home, a home cooked meal or two, and a hearty welcome to more if he wants it, does it? But if you were young and away from home for the first time, perhaps, you'd get an idea of what a tremendously big thing a home means in the life of a boy with forty-four hours' leave and no place to go in a whole big cityful.

It's the first women or girls the uniformed men meet when on leave that determine their conduct and their happiness. And the business of the Soldiers' and Sailors' club is to see that the boys meet the right women and the right girls and that they get into homes where, in part, the unpayable debt we owe these fighting lads may be made in a merry welcome and a happy time.

But without the coöperation of more Chicago homes we as a city are going to fall terribly short of our duty. Think of it! In a city of homes and plenty on a recent Sunday a couple of hundred boys who applied at the club were turned down for want of homes open to them!

Undoubtedly it is through ignorance on how to go about getting in touch with these boys that such a condition would arise. Again, many homemakers have the idea that a lot of extra preparations in the way of food and entertainment must be provided. Which is wrong!

These boys are not exacting as guests and none more appreciative could you extend an invitation to! Give them an armchair, permission to play the piano or talking machine to their hearts' content, and let them sleep, if they want to do that, as many of them do. You do not have to fuss over them or about them. Let them do their own entertaining and that's all they will ask and be happy. Give them a bathing suit and let them go swimming to the nearest beach. Lots of the navy boys never get a chance to go swimming until shore leave, contrary to your supposition, perhaps.

It is totally unnecessary to preach to the stay at homes their duty to the boy in uniform. Every thinking person realizes it. But Saturdays and Sundays especially, when thousands of boys are on leave and wandering around the streets in an aimless, unhappy, and dangerous way a reminder of our duty may not be amiss.

List your name as hostess with the club at its Washington street headquarters or at the war recreation board headquarters, 120 West Adams street. Let the club management know by Friday morning, if possible, how many boys you are willing to take care of. And be one who may be counted on. It is regrettable that women will list their homes and then advance a selfish, paltry excuse to evade entertaining.

Even worse dodgers are owners of automobiles, some carrying the war camp community shield, who refuse to fulfill their promise to serve when a call goes out from the club headquarters. Perhaps it is "husband has to be taken to the golf course or Sunday being his day off he must drive through the country," or some such excuse! But here's a chance for the men who wish they were young enough to shoulder the gun to shoulder their golf bags and walk to the course if the railroad service is not sufficient."

During the week days there is demand for motor cars and women are urged to list their machines for service, say for a couple of hours or for a half a day or a whole. But what is wanted above everything else are WOMEN WHO MAY BE RELIED UPON, not women who think a bridge or a dressmaking appointment more important than the entertainment of these boys without whom more than the luxuries of their lives would be wrested by a brutal enemy.

Right off the Reel

PATRIOTS, REAL AND "NEAR."

By Mae Tinée.

BY way of delivering a knock screened by incense:

There has been no more important factor in the arousing of national patriotism than the motion picture. In a day not far distant it was considered by many not necessary to stand when "The Star-Spangled Banner" was played or to clap for the Stars and Stripes. We were careless —lethargic. But now, how different it all is! And "pictures," with their constant reminders of what we are and what the national emblem represents, are largely responsible for the enthusiasm we put into our observances.

I refer more particularly to the various news films. There have been, however, several strong propaganda pictures that have done their duty of inspiration well.

All good things must, as time has shown us, have their imitations, and lately, one after the other, have appeared propaganda photoplays that certainly strain one's patience to sit through! They are silly, pointless, inadequate, and badly captioned. They are made cheaply and in a hurry in order that they may be sold while interest in the war is at fever heat, when almost any title referring to the kaiser, the United States, or Berlin is pretty sure to draw a crowd.

The men who put out such pictures are not patriots. They are leeches sucking rich nourishment from the public patriotism.

"Bound in Morocco," which starts today at Orchestra hall, is said to be a picturesque African desert photoplay. (Made in California.)

And now "Little Women," that best loved story of Louisa M. Alcott, is coming to the screen. It will be picturized by William A. Brady. The exterior scenes are being taken at the Alcott homestead in Concord.

Exhibitors are exhorted by a producing company to advertise a coming photoplay as follows:

MOTHERS!

Supposing you were told, just before your child was born, that you had an alien strain of blood in your veins, and that you and your child would be dishonored in your husband's eyes! What would you do?

A PISTOL SHOT!

and the two men rushed into the next room to find the persecuted woman lying on the floor with a revolver in her hands!

THREATS!

and his scoundrelly schemes were of no avail. This young girl went right ahead and was married to the proud young Virginian.

HER CHILD WAS NOT YET BORN when this scoundrel came to her and charged that there was a hateful alien strain of blood in her veins, and that she and her unborn child would be dishonored forever in her husband's eyes.

Wuxtry! Wuxtry!

You'll see your Bessie Love in Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Features after this —that is, until she skedaddles to some other company.

The Rialto theater likes its community singing so well that this week, too, it is to be heard. Time?—12:48, 3:25, 7:37, and 10 o'clock.

Paul Willis, who is to play the lead in the first of the new G. M. Anderson releases, has joined the Hollywood Officers' Training school, to be prepared for service when his call comes. He is not yet within the draft age.

Have you a plot in mind that you think would help win the war? If so, submit it, in synopsis form only, to James Vincent, secretary, advisory board, division of films, Times building, New York City. The government wants your ideas, and is particularly anxious for good stories relative to present day conditions in Russia, Italy, Mexico, and Central and South America.

If I can help you in any way, let me know. I'll do it gladly.

"A Hoosier Romance," the first of James Whitcomb Riley's works to be screened, will have Selig for its producer. The principal parts will be taken by Colleen Moore, Thomas Jefferson, and Harry McCoy.

Norman Kerry, report has it, has forsaken the film game to become a stock broker. Wonder where he got his hunch?

Charlie Chaplin's manager denies the authenticity of "Triple Trouble," in a telegram sent to the general manager of the National Exhibitors' circuit. He claims Mr. Chaplin never made a film of this name and that the comedy (?) must be a "rehash of old stuff which has been given a new title."

TOO RAPID FOR RHYME

By Guy F. Lee.

I sit down to write a poem of our fighting men's renown,
And I scarce get fairly started when they take another town.
A British commentator's praise I versify, and then
A Frenchman up and multiplies the happy words by ten.
The cable service headlines say the Yankees swat the Hun,
But ere I get a jingle framed they've got more on the run.
I'd like to be their Boswell in a khaki-lauding gem,
But darn those doughboys' peppy hides—I can't keep up with them!

It tickles me quite some to hear of how they're spreading Teuts
Around the landscape, and I'll say their ways and means are beauts;
The Fritzian din of "Kamerad" is drowning out the shells
As U. S. shockers shock the shockers with their own pet hells.
I want the good work to go on, but I have one request
To make of them before they lay the kaiser out to rest,
And that is this: Don't stop your war; continue till you've won,
But kindly take a lay-off till I get this anthem done!

Ask Me! Ask Me! Ask Me!

VOICE FROM THE WOODS: I'll soon be right there with you. Anyhow, I'll be somewhere in the woods quite shortly. Taylor Holmes is with Triangle. Address him care of that company, Culver City, Cal.

L. S.: You mean Richard Barthelmess, don't you? He took the part of Bayard Varick in "Rich Man, Poor Man." Address him care of the Lambs club, New York. Norman Kerry took the part of Gordon Phillips in "Amarilly of Clothes-Line Alley." Two questions are not "many." I can answer lots more than that.

ROBERT: "Friend Husband" will be Madge Kennedy's next release. You're welcome.

O. R. M.: I'm too bashful!

HAMMOND, IND.: I sure will give you some helpful hints on scenario writing if you will send me a stamped, addressed envelope.

Summer Going and Nothing Done but Work, Work, Work

By Mme. X.

UGH! Did you see it? It's a large plume of golden rod in full flower waving in the breeze by the roadside. It's autumn's first herald, and shrieks at us that, before we know it, we've reached the year's divide. If you've good eyesight you can look down the pass to those chill, sunless, though still remote, valleys where winter lurks to pounce on us poor mortals.

And summer seems hardly arrived! But then, who's had time to think about it or to enjoy it?

If you're not earning your living by a paid job you're earning your right to live by working in some job connected with the war. In between whiles you're devouring the latest newspapers to read about our soldiers and sailors over there. And as you read you try vainly to discount the natural enthusiasm of our war reporters; you remind yourself that the part our army is playing is relatively small—about ten to ninety, as compared with the French; you keep saying: "We mustn't be overoptimistic, it's a fatal mistake," and so on. But pride, hope, joy fill us all with an elation which is the reverse of wise. It's our business to hold ourselves well in hand these days; accept with satisfaction the praise which French and English military men give us, but remember that the fight, as far as we're concerned, has only just begun. By not an iota can the behind the lines workers let up in their labors.

Abas "Jackies" and "Sammy."

There is a general tendency at this particular moment of the year to drop toil of all kinds and take to the woods. If a temporary furlough will return the worker to his task better able to cope with it during the coming year, then by all means let him—or her—go to it. But don't forget that while you're loafing and enjoying yourself, men—our men—are enduring discomfort and privations; they are fighting and dying, while those other war sufferers, the civilians of the devastated districts, are still destitute of life's barest necessities, and that there's no one to help them but ourselves.

By the way, it is no longer good form to say Jackies or Sammies when speaking of our sailors and soldiers. If you don't want to be considered provincial, crassly western, you must use the terms blue jackets for the sailors and Yanks for the soldiers. Not pretty that last, but supposed to be the proper thing, and said to be preferred by the men in question.

The problems that meet the housekeeper these times are growing more serious daily, especially for the housekeeper who has not unlimited funds at her command. Prices of food and labor are going up by leaps and bounds. But now come rumors of further inroads on that part of the family budget set aside for household expenses which may well cause apprehension on the part of even the very well to do.

How much ground there is for the report that the government proposes a new tax which will fall heavily on housewives I don't know, but this tax, if placed, will cause quite a disturbance.

Tax on House Servants.

It is said that every family, however large the family and the house, is to be limited to four servants, and that a pro rata assessment is to be levied on each establishment. The proposal, rather nebulous so far, is that the employer of one servant pay to the government a tax of 25 per cent of the wages of this servant. If two are employed the tax will be raised to 50 per cent, if three it will be 75 per cent, and any one so rich as to have four servants must pay 100 per cent for this privilege. This seems a rather onerous and somewhat unfair proposal. And also the proposal may be abandoned.

If the mother of five or six children has a maid of all work to help her she would, no matter how small her means, pay the same tax that a woman, living alone with perhaps a much larger income pays for the privilege of hiring one servant.

A numerous family, living in a large house of many rooms, would be restricted to the same number of domestics as a small establishment.

Never was a people more eager than we to pay the cost of a terrible war, but this cost must be equitably distributed. This particular bit of proposed legislation is much discussed at luncheons and over the teacups.

Community Plans Hour.

Of course, the whole business of housekeeping is, to put it mildly, rottenly run. It is far behind the times and, as practiced generally, is a survival of the feudal era. Whereas all other business has learned the value of coöperation, the importance of using the latest mechanical inventions and the necessity of eliminating, as far as possible, waste, the housewife is still inclined to view herself and her domestic corps as the chatelaine and bondwomen in an ancient castle in the times of robber barons.

There is nothing more disturbing to the average woman than to suggest that the time has come for community kitchen, community laundry, and community house service generally—even community nursery (that last always arouses special ferocity). Living in a large apartment building, containing many small apartments—twenty-four to be exact—with an average of less than two people to each apartment, and with each of these small establishments having at least one maid, a so-called general housework girl, the scribe contemplates a waste of energy and money of a most depressing kind. There are forty-five residents in this building—none of them overburdened with wealth—and they are served by twenty-four cooks. At West Point five cooks provide excellent fare for 600 cadets.

"That only proves," says the scornful male, "that women don't know how to organize."

Not know how to organize? Great heavens! does that scornful male know anything about the achievements of women in war relief and home philanthropies? Just to itemize a few of the things being accomplished by women who up to these strenuous times were considered as belonging to the leisure class—a class now in danger of complete extinction.

Women with Regular Jobs.

There's Mrs. C. M. Ely, who manages a department in the central division of the Red Cross which receives, examines, and distributes each month a million woolen garments. Mrs. Russell Tyson, the executive head and animating force of the Chicago branch of the American Fund for French Wounded, manages an enterprise that collects and disburses a hundred thousand dollars' worth of aid in various forms for French wounded and refugees. Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank for a year made almost monthly trips to Washington to conferences, Mr. McAdoo held with the women's Liberty loan committee and which resulted in the extraordinarily important part played by the women of this country in the successful placing of the three big national loans.

Mrs. James Keeley, as head of the Chicago hostess' committee for the War Recreation board, goes daily to her office to direct the continually expanding work of this committee which touches the comfort, pleasure, and security of thousands of our embryo fighters.

She is now actively directing the construction of the pavilion in Grant park which is to be the chief headquarters of men on furlough in Chicago and which will be known as the Khaki and Blue club.

Perhaps the most original piece of work being organized and run by a Chicago woman of social prominence is the establishment of what might be called the salvage committee by Mrs. Samuel T. Chase—a committee which undertakes to raise $500,000 a year for the Red Cross by having all junk money given to this enterprise.

Up to now junk money, which means money derived from the sale of old newspapers, old iron, and old rags to peddlers, has been considered a negligible part of the housekeeper's income, as it comes in in such small driblets. But these driblets, if all turned to one use, would make a sizeable contribution to the nation's greatest philanthropy, the Red Cross.

Although she recently moved her household out to Lake Forest for the rest of the summer, Mrs. "Sam" Chase stopped not an instant in her pursuit of junk. The family moved out in the afternoon of a busy Monday. Mrs. Chase herself arrived that evening at 11 o'clock, after making a speech in a distant suburb, and went to her city office the next morning by the 8:36 train and has been going in on that train ever since and returning by the 5:10 p. m., just like all the other great financial magnates of Lake Forest. When you're running a business that aims at a profit of $500,000 a year you have to be at the helm all the time.

How It's Managed.

The scheme is managed in an interesting way. Mrs. Chase first approached all the wholesale buyers of junk, the firms to whom the peddlers sell their wares, and got them to support her plan. The banks have undertaken to be the transacting agent. They sell the peddlers coupon books and the peddlers pay for the junk, "ole rags, ole iron," with these coupons, the banks turning the money over to the Red Cross. Thus the peddlers lose nothing by the transaction.

To organize the women, whose coöperation is the crux of the whole undertaking, Mrs. Chase and her aids are endeavoring to reach every single housewife in Chicago and the adjacent country, and to do this they make speaking tours in every direction. The experiment met great success in Toronto, where it was first tried, and also in Minneapolis.

If successful here it will probably be made a nation-wide enterprise to aid the Red Cross. Before we get through we're going to be as careful and thrifty and money wise as the French. If it gets to be a national habit it will add enormously to our power and also to our wellbeing.

But, to return for a moment to my starting point, it isn't for lack of organizing ability and knowledge of the benefits of coöperation that American housekeepers run their homes in a wasteful and unbusinesslike manner. It's just because they haven't brought their minds to bear on the problem. Perhaps they won't until after the war, but let us hope that then they will establish it on as thorough a business basis as they run their hospitals and other philanthropies.

Meanwhile let them think about it and talk about it, so that they may bring to the solution the united wisdom of the most energetic and intelligent women of the world.

Women on Sacred Soil.

Most of the smart world of the north shore will hie themselves to the Old Elm Golf club this afternoon to witness the match between "Chick" Evans and Jock Hutchinson. It's to be a great occasion, as it's the first time women have been admitted to those sacred precincts. Tickets are $5 per, and the money is to go to the Red Cross.

The project was put up to a general vote of all the members and was lost by a sizable majority, whereupon the board of governors imperturbably went ahead and got up the affair. The members voting against it now know the inner feelings of the German reichstag when overriden by the Prussian junkers. These mysoginistic members are shaking their heads and muttering: "The dear old club will never be the same again. It's the entering wedge. Our old sense of privacy, freedom, and security is gone. There's no sacred spot left us. A plague on the women!"

On Tuesday evening next the concluding one of Prof. Halsey's interesting lectures on the war will be given at the Louis Laflins in Lake Forest, when Mrs. Laflin will make the occasion a distinctly social one. It was an experiment to have these lectures—which are annual summer events—in the evenings. Hitherto they have been morning affairs and were largely attended by Lake Forest women. But this year so many women go daily to war shops for work that it was feared that the attendance would be much reduced. Also it was thought that the men of the community would be interested in the professor and his topic, as they proved by a generous attendance.

Student of War.

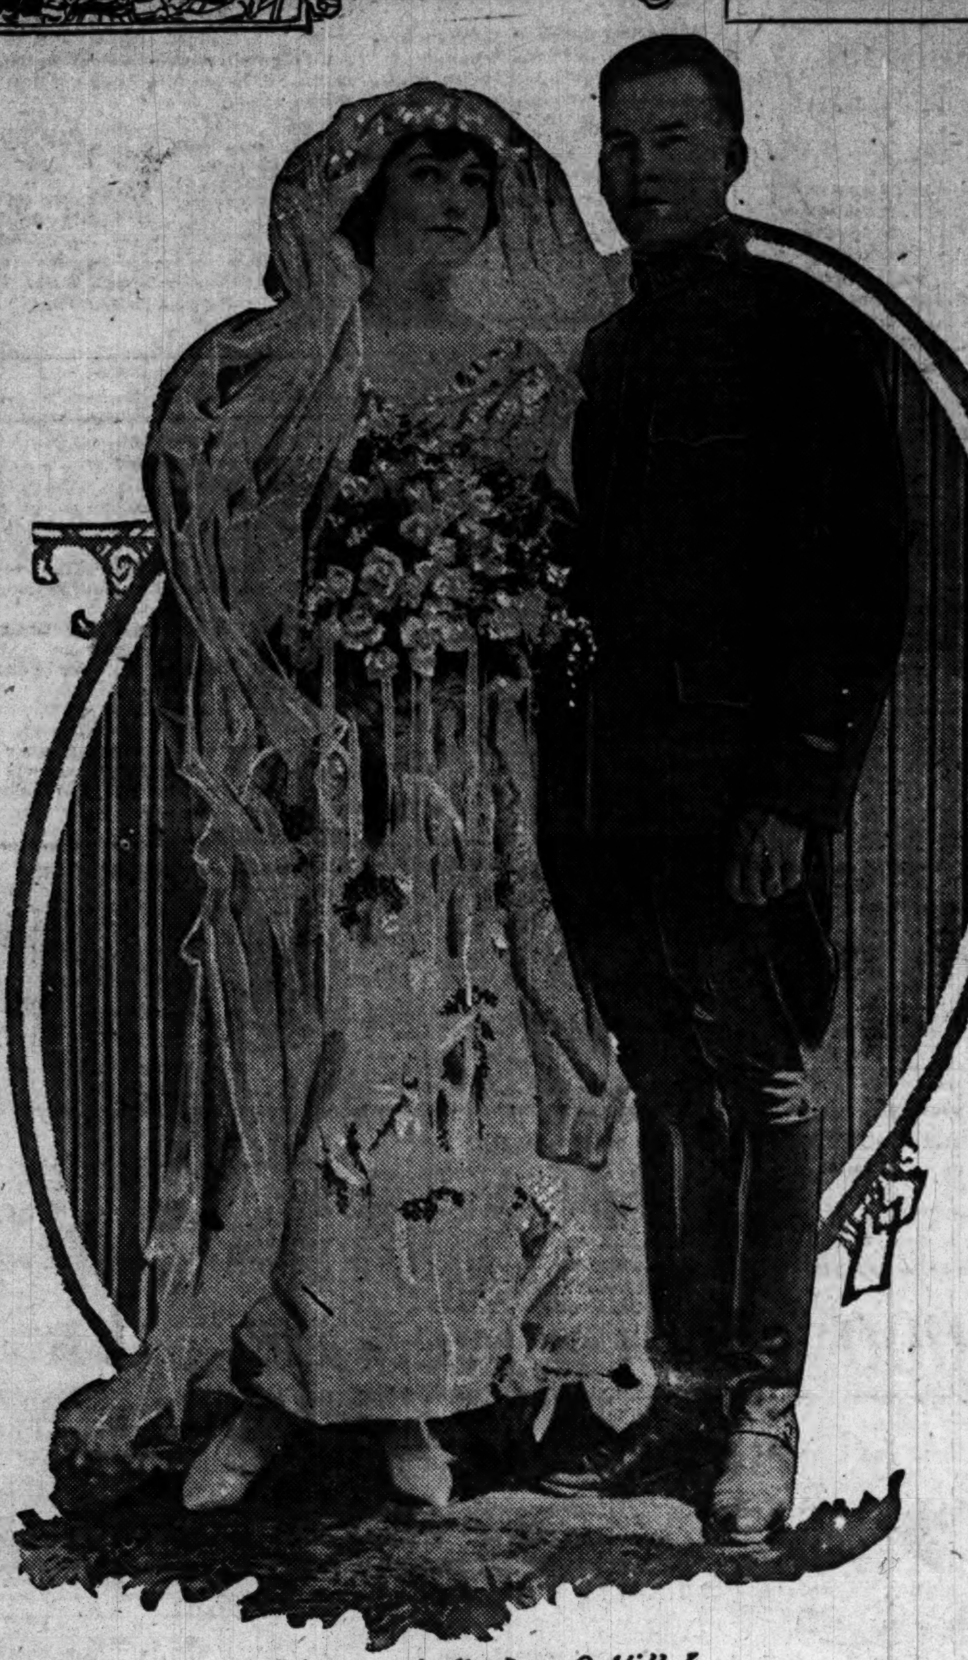
Since 1914 there has been no closer student of the great conflict than Prof. Halsey. He has every move, military and diplomatic, on the tip of his tongue. From the beginning he was an ardent pro-ally and through these great four years of hope and despair he sustained his willing followers with belief in the ultimate victorious outcome of the war for the powers that stand for freedom and justice.

Among those who subscribed to his lectures and his sentiments were the Henry Tuttles, the Walter Fishers, the H. B. Clows, the James Vileses, the E. A. Russells, the Granger Farwells, Mrs. C. M. Ely, Mrs. Hamline, and Mrs. Charles Comes.

A recent wedding of interest to many Chicagoans was that of Miss Frances Adler, sister of David Adler Jr. of Chicago, to Felton Elkins of Philadelphia and Santa Barbara, which took place ten days ago in Santa Barbara at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Adler. The Elkinses are spending their honeymoon in the mountains of southern California. They may settle in Santa Barbara, where Mr. Elkins has a house, or they may decide to come east.

The David Adlers, who are at present occupying Prof. Burnap's house in Lake Forest, expect soon to move into their own home in Libertyville. They bought a few months ago an old farm and farmhouse at the north end of Libertyville. For present occupancy they have fitted the latter with modern plumbing, etc., and will use it as a country abode until times of peace permit building a permanent residence. Meanwhile their crop of lettuce and radishes was one of the most aspiring and deep rooted in the entire district.

As They Were When They Were Married Last Week.



Lieut. and Mrs. Lon C. Hill Jr.

[Copyright: 1918: By Koehne.]

Miss Georgiana Owsley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Knox Owsley of Winnetka, and Lieut. Lon C. Hill Jr. of Harlingen, Tex., were married last Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the residence of the bride's parents. The wedding was very quiet, with only the members of the immediate family present. The bride had no attendants, and Paul Owsley, a brother of Mrs. Hill, was Lieut. Hill's best man.

The bride wore her mother's wedding gown of ivory satin and rose point lace. The wedding came as a surprise to Mrs. Hill's friends here, for, although she and Lieut. Hill had been engaged for about two years, no formal announcement had been made. They had planned to be married in September, but when Lieut. Hill found that he could more easily obtain a leave of absence now than later plans were hastened. Lieut. Hill has taken his bride to San Antonio, Tex., where he is assistant executive officer at Brooks aviation field.

News of Chicago Society

WEDDINGS

Miss Rosalie Buckingham Selfridge, daughter of Harry Gordon Selfridge of London, will be married on Wednesday to Prince Serge de Bolotoff, son of Princess Marie Wiasemsky of Russia. The wedding will be quiet owing to the recent death of the bride's mother, who was formerly Miss Rose Buckingham of this city. The bride will be attended by her two younger sisters, Violette and Beatrice. The wedding will take place at Highcliffe castle, the Selfridges' country residence near Bournemouth. Prince Bolotoff was the first Russian to build and fly an aeroplane, and he is now running an airplane factory in England. He is also naval aviation attaché to the Russian embassy in London.

The wedding of Miss Edith Louise Dysart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Le Moyne Dysart of 4925 Lake Park avenue, to Lieut. Gaston Berdonneau, a member of the French military mission to the United States, will take place next Saturday at 1:30 o'clock in the Kenwood Evangelical church. A reception at the Kenwood club will follow the wedding. Lieut. Berdonneau is an instructor in the reserve officers' training camp at Fort Sheridan.

Mr. and Mrs. James Rundle of Oak Park announce the marriage of their daughter, Ida, to Harry Bertram Bowman, which took place on July 22 in Philadelphia.

The marriage of Frieda Wolf Hagenbacher, daughter of Rudolf Wolf of 5009 Prairie avenue, to Harry Kaufmann of Kansas City, formerly of Chicago, will take place today.

Announcement is made by Charles M. Ohlsen of Oak Park of the marriage of his daughter, Edith, to Ensign Herbert Ward Chadwick of Oak Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Max Levinson, formerly of Chicago, now of Oakland, Cal., announce the marriage of their daughter, Leah Leckner, to Joseph P. Bem of Berkeley, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Bem will live in California.

The wedding of Miss Hester Williams, daughter of Mrs. Bennette Williams of Western Springs, to the Rev. James Foster, rector of Christ church, Streator, took place on Monday morning at All Saints' church, Western Springs. The service was read by the Rev. Dr. S. A. B. Mercer of the Episcopal seminary, assisted by the Rev. Dr. F. M. Wilson of All Saints' church. Miss Margaret Southwick was maid of honor, and George Morris was best man. Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was held at the residence of the bride's mother.

ENGAGEMENTS

The engagement is announced of Miss Josephine Ogden, daughter of Mrs. Howard Newton Ogden of 5700 Kimbark avenue, to Lieut. Richard Hollman Atwood of Waterbury, Conn., grandson of W. S. Atwood. Lieut. Atwood is an instructor in air service station at Gerstner field.

From Detroit comes the announcement of the engagement of Miss Marion Metcalf, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Metcalf, to Lieut. William W. Lang, son of Prof. and Mrs. A. E. Lang of Chicago. Prof. Lang is a member of the faculty of the University of Chicago. Miss Metcalf, who is a graduate of Wellesley and of Northwestern university, has for the last two years been instructor in hygiene in the Evanston High school. Lieut. Lang was educated in England, and when the war broke out was preparing for Oxford. He served two years in the Royal flying corps and is now stationed in Toronto as instructor in the overseas Canadian officers' training corps.

Announcement is made by Mr. and Mrs. Abel Bernstein of 910 Margate terrace of the engagement of their daughter, Essie, to Milton Freud, son of Julius Freud of Detroit, Mich.

Mr. and Mrs. Willard C. Coe of 929 Airdrie place announce the engagement of their daughter, Catherine Caryl, to Kenneth Bradford Stiles, son of Mrs. Clarence M. Stiles of 5848 Kenmore avenue. Mr. Stiles is in the United States marine corps, now stationed at Quantico, Va.

Announcement is made of the engagement of Miss Minna Blumenthal, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. A. R. Blumenthal of 4627 Indiana avenue, to Max Koltinsky of Gary, Ind.

The engagement is announced of Miss Bessie Edith Smith, daughter of Mrs. Thomas Smith of 117 South Hamilton street, to Fred John Falkenberg, son of John Falkenberg of 7336 Lafayette avenue.

The engagement is announced of Miss Fannie F. Kaufman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Kaufman of 917 South Bishop street, to Martin F. Cohn of Detroit.

Announcement is made by Mrs. Thomas A. Hendricks of 1422 Greenleaf street, Evanston, of the engagement of her daughter, Catherine Ruth, to Sergt. William Leahy, U. S. A., of Boston, Mass. No date has been set for the wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Smith of Englewood announce the engagement of their daughter, Mildred V., to Walter A. Heeren of Washington, D. C.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Alexander of 366 East Fifty-sixth street announce the engagement of their daughter, Beatrice, to Henry Hershleder of Chicago.

Announcement is made by Mr. and Mrs. William Lees of 223 North Euclid avenue, Oak Park, of the engagement of their daughter, Mabel Isabel, to Dr. Lloyd V. Magoon of Chicago.

From California comes the announcement of the engagement of Miss Marion J. Rugg, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Rugg of Los Angeles, formerly of Chicago, to Lieut. V. A. Wilkinson, son of W. A. Wilkinson. Lieut. Wilkinson is with the American expeditionary forces in France.

FUTURE EVENTS

Old Elm Golf club will be opened today for the first time to the public for the Red Cross tournament to be played by "Chick" Evans and Kenneth Edwards vs. Jock Hutchinson and James McDonald. Admission will be $5, and there will be no auction of the right to act as caddies for the players or of the golf balls used in the match. Seventeen well known Chicago women are on the woman's executive committee, and it is expected that there will be a record breaking crowd on the links.

Society at the South Shore Country club this week will be centered around the big trapshooting meets which are to continue until Saturday, beginning with the Red Cross shoot this morning. Wives and daughters of prominent trapshooters from all over the United States are here to watch the skill of the men, and many of the women will also compete. On Thursday afternoon a war savings stamp signed by President Wilson will be auctioned for the benefit of the orphans of the French aviators killed in the war. The governors of the club are on an outing across the lake at George F. Geary's Lakewood farm near Holland, Mich. Those in the party are Everett C. Brown, John G. Campbell, Charles E. Fox, W. W. Harless, R. J. McLaughlin, Stacy C. Mosser, E. Warren Everett, L. B. Patterson, W. M. Wilson, E. W. Tobin, Edwin W. Sims, Charles H. Smalley, Robert B. Upham, and Carleton White.

Unit 397, I. C. T. C., Capt. Crow commanding, will hold a benefit performance Monday and Tuesday evenings at the Arena Polar grove. The proceeds will go to the uniform and equipment fund of the unit.

The Psi Omega fraternity will give a "loyalty" banquet tomorrow night at the Congress hotel at which a service flag with 1,007 stars will be dedicated.

PERSONALS.

The war garden party is the latest fun at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. Last week Mrs. Thornton Lewis and Mrs. William Lewis gave one at the "Meadows." Miss Marion Strobel of Chicago was among the guests. Last week Burr McIntosh gave an entertainment at the Greenbrier for the benefit of the local canteen service. Mr. McIntosh, who has recently made a tour of the cantonments in the country, told of his experiences with the boys in camps.

The Greenbrier country horse show which is to be given on Friday and Saturday at the "Meadows" will be one of the biggest events of the season. Mrs. Eugene Barnhart, formerly of Evanston, will have an entry at the show. Mrs. Barnhart has as her guest her mother, Mrs. V. F. Johnson of Evanston. Mrs. Charles M. Hewitt of Chicago is a recent arrival at the springs.

Mrs. Raymond C. Thorne has returned from New York, where she has been spending the last two months. Mr. Thorne, who is in air service and is stationed at Garden City, will be transferred to Texas soon, where Mrs. Thorne will join him.

NEWS OF THE CHICAGO WOMEN'S CLUBS.

Miss Bertha L. Iles

Mrs. Dunlap Smith
Koehne Photo

Miss Bertha L. Iles is chairman and manager of the Drama League children's hour at the municipal pier on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday afternoons. She will have personal charge of all the work during August.

Mrs. Dunlap Smith, chairman of the social service department of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense, is one of the large group of women of the city who devote much of their time as volunteers in the hive of industry at 120 West Adams street.

Social Service Committee Needs Men Volunteers

By Mrs. Dunlap Smith.

[Chairman of the Social Service Department of the Woman's Committee of the State Council of Defense.]

ALL elemental things, such as earthquakes, famine, fire, and war, make a direct appeal to the sympathies of mankind. Response is immediate; the present war has proved this a thousandfold. And while there has been this multitudinous response to the first demands of war and war relief there has come, too, the realization of the danger that the more prosaic forms of service here at home may be neglected.

In order to maintain as nearly as possible the ideal peace time standards, there has been formed in Illinois the department for social service of the State Council of Defense, which has made its chief work an effort to arouse people to the necessity of supporting home charities by publicity and propaganda, and to catch and steer some of this enthusiasm for service in the direction of home charities.

This department has its office at 120 West Adams street, and registers and classifies all volunteers who offer social service, and makes an effort to induce those who are untrained to take the course in social service in war time offered by the Chicago School of Civics and Philanthropy. As far as possible, our bureau tries to fill the needs of the various social service agencies of the city and vicinity which call for volunteer help. About seventy-five agencies have been served, and 1,218 volunteers have registered. Of these, many have given emergency service. We have found volunteers for 428 appeals, and have permanently placed 160 volunteers.

One of the great needs which the department has tried to fill is that for young men leaders for groups of boys. With the departure for war of most of the Boy Scout and boys' club leaders, the settlement groups and other organizations have been left without directors, which, added to the effect of the excitement of war on younger boys, has greatly increased juvenile delinquency. This need we are devoting much time to filling at the present, and volunteers for the work are earnestly asked for.

We notice a great difference in the kind of service now offered from that volunteered in the beginning, when volunteers came in who apparently had no limits to their ability and enthusiasm, the talents offered ranging from cooking to vaudeville. One woman offered us a service of "village specialties." Another, perhaps the most versatile of all the volunteers entered in our card catalogue, offered to give one day a week or more to work as teacher, musician, telephone operator, or carpenter, with exceptional ability in speaking and reading English, Spanish, and Chinese, and in oil painting, knitting, framing pictures, sewing, and making out of contracts. As a rule now, however, the service offered is that of a thoroughgoing and practical kind.

The need of men volunteers has been so great that our office has tried to recruit men as well as women, and it has placed some successful men volunteers. One is directing the evening play hour with a group of boys at a settlement, and will form them into a club for the winter. Another is training a group in dramatics, and others are acting as investigators for the Juvenile Protective association.

In answer to a plea from the Chicago Nursery and Half Orphan asylum for some one who would make over and repair for the children their last year's dresses, we found that members of the Hyde Park Travel club would mend for this family of over 200 children.

To indicate the variety of service which our volunteers are ready to do: some carry patients in their motor cars to and from clinics, take nurses on calls, and carry children and old people on outings; there are many workers in recreational lines, teaching games and dancing, playing the piano, and amusing and reading to people; some teach, some instruct in cooking and sewing, teach occupational work to invalids and the blind, and some act as interpreters for foreign language speaking people.

Besides the volunteer bureau, there is another human form of service which has been rendered by the group service committee under Mrs. Arthur L. Farwell, providing occupation for many forlorn and neglected men and women in our county institutions. The group committee has provided yarn for the old people to knit into socks, games for the children, and entertainments of various kinds. We offer and call for volunteers to teach useful occupations to the industrially crippled, blind, and maimed. There is just now in a county institution a boy of 17 years whose feet have been amputated, and while he is waiting for long months for artificial feet we are trying to find some one who will volunteer to teach him a trade.

Among those who have done excellent work in our department as volunteers are Mrs. Basil Ruysdael, Mrs. James Forstall, Miss Rose Wertheimer, Miss Emily Bissell, Mrs. Max Epstein, Miss Elizabeth Adsit, Miss Nan Gardner, Miss Margaret Bently, and Mrs. Julia S. Rosenfeld, who has organized the knitters at the asylum at Dunning.

WOMEN IN WARTIME.

There will be an intensive drive this week at the food conservation bureau and demonstration, 28 South Wabash avenue, on canning, pickling, drying, and salting of vegetables. Government experts will be there to show how to do it. Before the regular daily lectures at 2 o'clock on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons a talk will be given by a food expert on "What the Food Administration Has Accomplished in a Year's Time." The following is the calendar for the week at the station:

Tomorrow, 11 a. m. and 2 p. m.—Mrs. Helen Ruggles "Sugarless Marmalades and Spiced Fruits." Miss Sarah Ormsby, states relations demonstrator, "Canning of Vegetables" [cold pack method].

Tuesday, 11 a. m., Miss Sarah Ormsby, states relations demonstrator, "Canning of Vegetables" [cold pack method]. 2 p. m., J. H. Prost, practical demonstration of drying fruits and vegetables—beans, peas, carrots, apples.

Wednesday, 11 a. m., Miss Mildred Taber, states relations demonstrator, "Balanced Meal for All Ages." 2 p. m., Miss Sarah Ormsby, states relations demonstrator, "Canning of Vegetables" [cold pack method].

Thursday, 11 a. m., Miss Ethel Lendrum, states relations demonstrator, "Wheat Substitutes—Peanut Butter Loaf, Rice, and Barley Muffins, Spoon Cornbread." 2 p. m., Miss Sarah Ormsby, states relations demonstrator, "Canning Vegetables" [cold pack mehtod].

Friday, 11 a. m., Miss Elizabeth Mace, states relations demonstrator, "Salting, Pickling, and Drying." 2 p. m., Miss Sarah Ormsby, states relations demonstrator, "Canning of Vegetables" [cold pack method].

Saturday, all day, a states relations demonstrator will be at the bureau all day to answer all questions and discuss the cold pack method of canning, pickling, drying, and salting. A master baker will demonstrate the making of quick breads with wheat substitutes, yeast bread, with minimum amount of wheat and wheatless pastry.

The food committee of the Chicago Woman's Aid is conducting classes every Tuesday and Wednesday morning from 10 to 12 at Sinai center, 4622 Grand boulevard, in canning and drying of fruits and vegetables. The instructor is sent by the National Council of Defense, and admission is free.

Based upon the results of British and French experience and as well upon the situation in this country in peace times, an outline has been made of reasonable standards for women workers on government contracts. These standards have the backing of the women in industry committee, Illinois division, National Council of Defense. They are backed by the National Women's Trade Union league, and as well by a wide public. They have received favorable attention from government officials in Washington.

They are tabulated as follows:

Wages for adult labor—1. The highest rate prevailing in the industry affected. 2. Equal pay for equal work. 3. Trade without wage standards to be handled by an adjustment committee. 4. Adjustment committee to handle all fair proportion to increasing cost of living.

The eight hour day. One day rest in seven. Prohibition of night work for women. Standards of sanitation and fire protection. Protection against overfatigue and industrial diseases. Prohibition of tenement house labor. Exemption from call into industry of women whose small children need their care. Exemption from call into industry of women two months before and after childbirth.

Mrs. Samuel T. Chase, chairman of the woman's committee of the salvage bureau, Chicago chapter, American Red Cross, announces a cartoon poster contest beginning tomorrow and continuing two weeks. Children must not be featured in the poster, because children have no part in the salvage campaign, only adults being permitted to collect waste material to sell to the junkmen in exchange for Red Cross salvage coupons.

The poster campaign was suggested by the winning slogan, "Junk will junk the kaiser," from the pen of Miss Mae Burns, 4247 West Congress street. Mrs. Chase has invited the coöperation of Miss Grace Heron, head of the artists' department of the Red Cross, and cartoons will be accepted at the headquarters, 704 Garland building, and passed upon by a committee selected from the leading cartoonists of the city. The ward chairmen and their precinct captain are working strenuously for the Red Cross honor banner to be presented by Marquis Eaton to the ward organization leading in the campaign for salvage pledges.

In addition, every ward organization going beyond its quota as assigned by Chicago chapter, will receive an "Over the Top" banner from the woman's committee. Serving on this committee are Mrs. Chase, chairman; Mrs. Lambert O. Wile, vice chairman; Mrs. Joseph G. Coleman, Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, Mrs. Cyrus Hall McComick, Mrs. James Keeley, Mrs. Robert Hall McCormick Jr., Mrs. William J. Chalmers, Mrs. Martin Kent Northam, Mrs. John F. Smulski, and others. For the best cartoon on the newly adopted slogan, the men's committee, of which George M. Ludlow is chairman, will present a trophy.

On Thursday of each week during the remainder of the summer little Jane Naugle will be in charge of a children's day grab bag at the Food for France shop, 29 South Wabash avenue. Thursday is Mrs. Archibald T. Naugle's special day at the shop, and she is assisted by her sister, Miss Nan Morier, in the tea room. Miss Jane and her friend, Betty Thornton, will also sell nosegays in the afternoon. Charles A. Stonehill Jr., in his khaki uniform, assists his mother on Mondays, and on Tuesdays Mrs. Joseph Harris' small daughter, Josephine, is candy maid. Walter Cummings Avery Jr. of Oak Park is the official bugler.

The Chicago Y. M. C. A. has made a plan for giving free outdoor lectures on civic and patriotic subjects in twelve of the recreation parks of the city, by which information on the necessity of making use of the products of the war gardens by pickling, drying, canning, and salting will be given out.

All Chicago recruiting stations for the national drive for enrollment of women in the United States student nurses' reserve will open in the city tomorrow. The following is a list of the ward headquarters and the women in charge: Mrs. L. L. Funk, Third ward, Forty-fourth street and Grand boulevard; Mrs. John O'Connor; Sixth ward, 918 East Fifty-fifth street; Mrs. Marshall Miller, Seventh ward, 1208 East Sixty-third street; Mrs. Ernest Ingram, Ninth ward, Kensington police station; Mrs. Sylvia Lawson, Fourteenth ward, 445 North Kedzie avenue; Mrs. Dorothy Kahn, Sinai center, Chicago Woman's Aid office; Miss Elizabeth Case, Twenty-first ward, 1130 North Clark street; Mrs. Margaret Taylor, Thirtieth ward, 5423 South Halsted street; Mrs. W. J. Roberts, Thirty-first ward, 5710 South Halsted street; Mrs. Waldeman Deazie, Thirty-second ward, Ogden park field house; Mrs. R. T. Rockefeller, Thirty-second ward, Hamilton park field house and Morgan Park Military academy, One Hundred and Eleventh street; Miss Amanda Selliken, Thirty-third ward, 3405 Fullerton avenue, and Mrs. L. S. Baker, Thirty-fourth ward, 3709 Ogden avenue.

The Illinois division of the committee for the relief of Belgian prisoners in Germany, of which Mrs. Samuel S. Hutchinson is chairman, has become a branch of the national allied relief committee, headquarters of which are in New York. The Illinois headquarters remain the same, however, room 452 First National Bank building, and Mrs. Hutchinson requests that all contributions from persons in this state should be made by check payable to Ralph Van Vechten, treasurer of the committee in Illinois, and sent to her at the Illinois headquarters.

Five thousand or more of the Belgians, those who made the first stand against the Hun in the early days of the war, are still held in German prison camps, and are dependent for their lives and their chances of returning to their homes after the war upon the contributions made through the relief committee, according to Mrs. Hutchinson. Eighteen dollars will care for one of these prisoners for six months, supplying him with much needed rations and giving him the encouragement of knowing that there are people interested in his welfare.

The food for the prisoners is sent via Holland, Mrs. Hutchinson states. She is in receipt of 300 postcards from the prisoners acknowledging the receipt of rations already sent. Among the Chicagoans who have adopted prisoners and to whom the cards are addressed are Henry J. Patten, Everett L. Millard, J. H. Hanson, and Mrs. J. D. Young.

Of all the states in the union except Iowa, Illinois is the slowest with regard to the registration of children's births. With a law requiring that all children born in the state be registered at the time of birth, the government has never been able to place Illinois in the birth registration area because she has fallen far below the requirements in this respect and the reports of births and deaths have been incomplete and inaccurate.

At the present time this is causing all sorts of trouble at the exemption boards. In many cases there is absolutely no way of proving the age of men called to the colors, the birth certificates not being available. The lack of certificates has also made it possible for unscrupulous parents and employers to exploit young children regardless of the child labor laws, and other legal complications concerning inheritance arise for the same cause.

In September Uncle Sam is to send men to Chicago to take another census of births and deaths in the state and before that time the members of the child welfare department of the woman's committee, Council of National Defense, are going to make a drive.

Mrs. Ira Couch Wood, chairman of of this department and director of the Elizabeth McCormick memorial fund, announced the plans for the drive. The first thing is to get a list of all the doctors and midwives in each ward of the city. This work will probably be done by some of the university students who are making a survey of the wards in connection with the woman's committee as part of their sociological study.

When the list is complete the women ward leaders will be asked to call upon these doctors and midwives and ask for a report of the births for April, May, and June. Doctors who charge 25 cents to register a baby's birth will be informed that the law says it must be done, fee or no fee.

Municipal Pier Is Playground for City Kids

THOUSANDS of children are having happy hours of recreation at the municipal pier auditorium each Monday, Wednesday, and Friday afternoon. At 1 o'clock the doors of the large auditorium are opened, and until 2 o'clock the children sing, under the leadership of Mrs. Grace Norbeck of the Civic Music association.

At 2 o'clock they disperse into groups, some of them rehearsing the play which will be presented the next week, some of them learning folk dances, and others gathering about an experienced story teller. Thus the afternoon is spent until 5 o'clock, when they are bundled safely off for home.

Each Wednesday there is an hour's program open to the public which includes the play which the children have prepared during the previous week, group and solo dancing, and chorus singing.

The two towers at the east end of the pier have been given to the Drama league for classrooms. A piano has been donated for each tower, and a talking machine has been loaned for the folk dancing classes. Well known story tellers give their services each week, and the dancing instructors are young women who have been active in playground and recreation work in the city.

Costumes for the plays are made in the auditorium during rehearsals in a portion which has been screened off and is equipped with sewing machines. The materials for the costumes are donated by the members of the Drama league, and a mothers' committee, composed of mothers of the Junior Drama league members, oversee the putting together of the costumes.

A costume design committee directed by Mrs. Harry Armstrong takes charge of the designing of the costumes and scenery for the plays.

The city street railway gives free street car tickets to the Junior Drama league committee, thus enabling hundreds of children to spend three afternoons each week at the pier. Frank I. Bennett, commissioner of public works, and Mrs. Lyman A. Walton, president of the Drama league, have made the children's work at the municipal pier a reality.

The work is under the supervision of the city's most skilled directors, and it fosters in a peculiarly potent manner the ideals of patriotism and democracy. It has been a definite help in checking juvenile delinquency which is a direct result of war conditions.

Miss Bertha L. Iles is chairman and manager of the children's hour at the municipal pier, and she will have personal charge of all the work during August.

CLUB NOTES

Chicago will be host to the members of the Catholic Press Association of the United States and Canada, which will hold its eighth annual convention in the Florentine room of the Congress hotel Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, Aug. 15, 16, and 17, closing with a program by Mme. Lace Curtain Bargains
Annual Clearance of Odd Lots
One Pair, Two Pair and Single Panels
50c ON THE $1 TOMORROW

Fine Lace Curtains are becoming very scarce. The industry has practically been suspended in France and Switzerland, where all the beautiful curtains were made. The finer domestic qualities are also becoming very scarce on account of the high cost of raw materials, labor conditions, etc., on account of the great war.

Regardless of all these conditions we, as usual, will offer to our patrons our accumulation of all odd lots at one-half the regular prices tomorrow.

NOTICE—All odd lots include the sample curtains. Some of them are slightly soiled or imperfect. They are all priced accordingly and cannot be exchanged or returned. On sale tomorrow morning. No mail orders accepted.

NEWS OF THE CHICAGO WOMEN'S CLUBS

The following nurses have been assigned to duty by the surgeon general: Anna Henneberry, Leona E. Kraus, Clara E. Schuenke, Katherine Babcock, Anna F. Tighe, Beda M. Bergstrom, Margaret Mahoney, Irene M. Thulis, Johanna MacNamara, Eva B. Stoner, Annie C. Ahlstrand, Augusta M. Steidel, Hilda J. Swanson, Edyth L. Hausman, and Sophia K. Larson.

Mrs. Edward W. Bemis, chairman of the Americanization committee of the State Council of Defense, is spending the month of August in New York City. Mrs. Russell H. Opdyke is taking her place on the committee. Dr. Caroline Hedger, who is in charge of the Institution on Americanization, will open her course of instruction on Aug. 19 for two weeks.

The subjects of all civil service examinations and the days on which they are to be given will be posted this week on the bulletin board of the committee on courses of instruction of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense, sixth floor, 120 West Adams street.

The women and children in industry committee of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense announces a course of ten talks to be given at the Woman's City club by Miss Alice Henry of the National Woman's Trade Union league. The course will be called "Pressing Problems of Today." The talks will be given tomorrow, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of this week at 10 a. m. and on the same days and hour of next week.

The Abraham Lincoln W. R. C. will give a card party in Rothschild's tearoom on Wednesday for its knitting wool fund.

The women at Lake Geneva will give a series of bridge parties during August, to take place on each Thursday of the month at the Lake Geneva Country club. Holiday home, the pet charity of the Chicagoans at Lake Geneva, will be the beneficiary.

The fee for the series of four parties is to be $10 and Mrs. George G. Parker is chairman of the affair. They are called knitting and bridge parties, as those who do not play may sit and knit on the spacious porch of the clubhouse.

Among those interested in instituting this benefit are Mrs. George G. Parker, Mrs. William Wrigley Jr., Mrs. John J. Mitchell, Mrs. Daniel Peterkin, Mrs. Tracy C. Drake, Mrs. Francis T. A. Junkin, Mrs. Seymour Morris, Mrs. E. H. Boisot, Mrs. Edwin A. Potter.

Private tutors in bacteriology and topographical drafting are wanted by the committee on women and children in industry, a branch of the woman's committee of the State Council of Defense, to give instruction to girls who are about to take civil service examinations. Mrs. W. S. Hefferan, chairman of the committee, will receive applications at 120 West Adams street.

Kenilworth, with a population of only 927, has been for the last six or seven weeks entertaining 50 or 60 men in uniform on Saturdays and Sundays. The entertainment has been informal and for the most part in the homes, but its increasing popularity has resulted in the forming of a hospitality committee in coöperation with war camp community service. Mrs. Charles Ware is chairman and Miss Dorothy Sears vice chairman.

SOCIETY

Mrs. Norman W. Harris, who is seldom without one or more of her grandchildren while she is at her Lake Geneva residence, is now entertaining Norman W. Harris II., the small son of Mr. and Mrs. Hayden Harris. Hayden Harris has enlisted and is now stationed at Fort Monroe. Mrs. Harris' younger son, Lieut. Stanley Harris, is in France. Mr. and Mrs. Maddon McLean, daughter and son-in-law of Mrs. Harris, with their family, of Evanston, will go soon to visit Mrs. Harris.

News of the Religious World

Insure Welfare of Everybody by Church Census

By the Rev. W. B. Norton.

The Rev. Earle M. Ellsworth, D.D.

The Rev. Earle M. Ellsworth will preach his first sermon today as pastor of the Grace Methodist Episcopal church, Locust and North La Salle streets. He succeeds the Rev. William C. Milliken, who goes to the pastorate of the First Methodist Episcopal church, Lancaster, O., from which Dr. Ellsworth comes to Chicago.

Dr. Ellsworth is a graduate of De Pauw university, Greencastle, Ind., and De Pauw School of Theology. He received the degree of doctor of divinity from Ohio Northern university. He has been pastor of the following churches in Ohio: Grace church, Springfield; Trinity, Dayton; Price Hill, Cincinnati; First, Greenfield, and First, Lancaster. In Greenfield he led in the building of a church costing $125,000. During his pastorate in Lancaster, where he served five years, he paid a church debt of $9,000, purchased a parsonage, and received 1,500 members into the church, leaving to his successor a church of 2,042 members. He organized a men's Bible class which at one time was said to be the largest in the world, having a maximum attendance of over 3,000.

The Grace church, Chicago, is one of the oldest and most influential of the city Methodist churches, although it is facing the downtown problem. Dr. Ellsworth assumes the pastorate with a full understanding of the difficulties to be overcome and the special opportunities of ministering to a congregation composed largely of young people.

LOOKING after the last man, woman, and child is the plan of the Austin Federation of Churches, which is conducting a religious census of the community.

There are fifteen churches of various denominations in the plan, and the work will be tabulated and kept on file in the Austin Young Men's Christian association for the purpose of convenience and for the sake of giving all pastors an equal opportunity to have access to the file.

The plan calls for a complete survey of the membership and church preference of all families and individuals. Where membership or a church preference is indicated, the card used by the census taker is turned over to the pastor of the church indicated. Where no preference is indicated, the card is given to the pastor whose location seems most favorable to his giving the individual or family the proper attention.

The new feature is that the plan will not be considered as having been carried out when the pastor first receiving the card has called on the persons named. It will be considered complete only when the person or persons have been established in at least friendly relations with some church.

After a pastor has had three months in which to offer the service of his church, and the person or family sought does not respond to the invitation, the name or names are turned over to some other pastor, who assumes pastoral oversight for three months. It is the belief of the pastors of the federation that every family in a community ought to have some church in which they will feel especially interested, and which will feel interested in them, or, in case no such relationship can be established, that the fault will not lie with the pastors or churches. The Rev. Robert H. Beattie, pastor of the Austin Presbyterian church, is president of the federation.

The question of the merger of the membership of the Sixth Presbyterian church, Vincennes avenue and Thirty-sixth street, of which the Rev. R. R. Bigger is pastor, with the First Presbyterian church, Forty-first street and Grand boulevard, of which the Rev. W. C. Covert is pastor, is under consideration. The increase of the Negro population in the neighborhood of the Sixth church is said to be responsible for the proposed change.

Those who favor the union of the two churches cite the example of the merger of the Central Park and Eighth Presbyterian churches, the plans for the merger of the Jefferson Park and the Third Presbyterian churches, the merger of the Plymouth Congregational and the Kenwood Evangelical churches, the turning over to the Negroes of the First Baptist and the South Park Methodist Episcopal churches, both of them fine buildings once housing flourishing white congregations, and several other church adjustments of a similar character. The Sixth Presbyterian church is still a vigorous church and may decide to remain in its present field.

The Rev. E. F. Williams, who celebrated his eighty-sixth birthday on July 22, will supply the pulpit of the Wellington Avenue Congregational church, Wellington avenue and Broadway, during August. Dr. Williams, who performed a similar service for the church last year, is pastor emeritus of the Wellington Avenue church.

A committee has been elected by the Second Congregational church, Oak Park, to secure a pastor as successor to the Rev. Noble S. Elderkin, who was forced to resign because of his anti-war beliefs. P. D. Konold, Sidney Paxton, and W. E. Longley are three of the ten members who compose the committee. Ministers who will supply the pulpit are: Today, the Rev. H. H. Walker; Aug. 11, the Rev. Ozora S. Davis; Aug. 18, the Rev. H. T. Sell, Kenosha, Wis.; Aug. 25, the Rev. H. H. Walker.

The Evanston Christian church, the Rev. O. F. Jordan, pastor, expects to erect a $50,000 church building, but have decided to wait until the end of the war before beginning active operations.

The First Presbyterian church, of Ottumwa, Ia., is planning to build after the war, and for that purpose is raising its subscription of $100,000 in Liberty bonds and thrift stamps.

The Prospect avenue Methodist Episcopal church, the Rev. Clarence Miller, pastor, has expended $850 in decorating.

The La Salle Avenue Baptist church is sending its quota of children for outings to Harbert, Mich., where cottages have been placed at the disposal of the church. The daily vacation Bible school at the La Salle Avenue church has an average attendance of over 100, double that of last year.

Every Church of the Disciples denomination in Illinois is requested to send the number of men enlisted in the army or navy from the church to the Rev. H. H. Peters, state secretary, Bloomington. A service flag will be raised at the Disciples' state convention, which will be held in Eureka Sept. 2-5. The flag raising will be held in connection with a patriotic service Sept. 5.

The Rev. Ernest M. Stires, rector of St. Thomas' Protestant Episcopal church, New York, will go to France under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Dr. Stires was formerly rector of Grace church, Chicago.

The national committee of the churches and moral aims of the war announces that the Rt. Rev. Charles Gore, bishop of Oxford, England, and the Rev. Arthur T. Guttery, president of the Primitive Methodist conference, will visit the United States in September and address various gatherings of ministers and laymen.

The Rev. Edwin W. Todd, rector of the Trinity Protestant Episcopal church, Oshkosh, Wis., has the chimes of the church rung every day at 11 o'clock as a reminder of daily prayer for success of the nation in the war.

During the vacation period the Calvary Baptist church, Sixtieth street and Prairie avenue, will be redecorated. Dr. R. N. Von Doren is pastor.

The annual camp meeting of the United Evangelical churches will be held at Barrington, Ill., Aug. 16-26. Bishop W. H. Fouke and the Rev. Dr. C. A. Mock will be among the special speakers. The Keystone League of Christian Endeavor union, which is the young people's organization, will hold a rally on Saturday evening, Aug. 17. A banner will be given to the society having the largest percentage of membership present.

The Rev. Laird T. Hites, who was ordained on July 17 in the Hyde Park Baptist church, and Mrs. Hites will go early this fall as missionaries to Rio de Janeiro, South America. Dr. Hites' work will be chiefly that of teaching for which he has been preparing in the divinity school of the University of Chicago. He has received the degree of B. D. and has completed his residence requirements for the degree of Ph. D.

Dr. Albert Leonard Murray of Evansville, Ind., formerly of Evanston, has been called as first rector of St. John's church, Cedar Rapids, Ia. The new parish will be in affiliation with the Episcopal church, but is organizing on the wide basis of being a key church in working out the adaptations of the church to the new age. St. John's will be evangelical and modern, broad church and liberal in interchurch relationships.

Chicago to Have Most Complete War Exhibition

By Charles Lee Bryson.

Captured German Trench Mortar

THE United States government has chosen Chicago as the site of the biggest and most complete war exposition in this country since the war began, and the biggest that will be given for a long time—perhaps until the end of the war. Seventeen carloads of war trophies, consisting largely of cannon, rifles, airplanes, etc., captured from the Germans, and materials of war used by the allies, will be put on exhibition for two weeks in Grant park from Labor day, Sept. 2, until Sept. 15.

It is not a private money making affair, but an official exposition, given by the government through the committee on public information and the Illinois State Council of Defense, and in which the governments of France, Great Britain, Canada, Italy, and Belgium participate. Nothing is for sale. Nothing is to be promoted. The admission fee will be very small, and if it pays the bare expenses of bringing the exhibits here and placing them before the public, that is all that is wanted. If there should be a surplus, it goes by law into the United States treasury and reduces by that much the burdens of the taxpayer.

Reproduce Battlefield.

It will be a battlefield, reproduced faithfully to the smallest detail, within the limitations of the grounds. Front line trenches will be there, laid out by the very officer who laid them out in that Flanders battlefield where the Princess Pats fought until there are now but three men left alive of the original regiment.

It will show No Man's land—all but the ghastly death scenes and one can well imagine them—that strip of ground ruled over by jealous Death where neither Boche nor human being dares set foot except by stealth and in the darkest hour of night. No Man's land, with its great cellars digged by shells, with its plowed and torn and pulverized dirt and gravel, with its wilderness of barbed wire entanglements, with its wrecks of guns and wagons and airplanes.

First aid stations will be shown, with the blessed sign of the Red Cross at the entrance—favorite mark for German shells.

Guns of all sizes and kinds, with soldiers and sailors to man them and show how they are used; aeroplanes, signal stations, listening posts, fire control stations—everything that can be reproduced in so small a field, will be shown.

There will be torpedoes like those the Germans have repeatedly fired into hospital ships—like the one with which they sank the Lusitania, with her hundreds of women and children.

There will be planes of the type which fly over the cities behind the lines at night, seek out Red Cross hospitals, and with their bombs kill wounded men, surgeons, and nurses alike.

There will be the incendiary pastels of which every German soldier at the beginning of the war carried sixty. With these they burned houses and churches. The city of Louvain was burned with them.

Show American Trophies.

Of the greatest interest to Americans will be the war material used by our boys, and the trophies captured by them from the enemy. O, yes, there are guns and plunder of all kinds taken from the proud Germans by the Yankee boys—and if it be possible to get them here in time there will be a big display of cannon captured by Chicago troops in the great battle now raging between the Marne and the Aisne. A cable has been sent to Gen. Pershing asking him, if possible, to ship some of the booty over in time for the great exposition at Chicago.

In the Belgian exhibit is one poor fellow's helmet—a Belgian soldier—with a bullet hole through it, showing how he died. There is even a rude wooden bench from a railway station in Brussels, which the Germans carried away, took with them to the Russian front, and had to leave in the Austrian station of Kocova, Galicia. There it was found by Belgian soldiers fighting on that front. Later the Germans got possession of it again, but in a night attack the Belgians found it a second time and carried it away.

The Italian exhibit contains a great many specimens of Austrian guns and shells. There is an incendiary bomb dropped on Venice in an effort to burn that splendid city; an Austrian floating mine; guns from Austrian submarines; torpedoes taken from Austrian submarines destroyed by the Italian navy, and the innumerable forms of rifles, trench tools, shells, periscopes, bayonets, and clothing used by the Italian army.

Remembering their beloved cathedral of Reims, the French have placed with their exhibit a shrine, wrecked by the Germans. But they also have spoils taken in the hottest battles—guns and gun carriages, "whiz-bangs," trench mortars, mine wefers, German 8-inch incendiary shells, aeroplanes of the type which tried to destroy Paris, and Zeppelin bombs. There is a complete exhibit of the famous French field gun, the "75," so-called because its caliber is 75 millimeters.

Guns from Cruiser Emden.

The British exhibit includes guns from the cruiser Emden, which a British ship destroyed; guns taken from the Turks; guns captured in Gallipoli, and all manner of wreckage from a score of battlefields. Of great interest are the British medals awarded for conspicuous bravery or great service to the empire.

Canada, of course, sets great store by her trophies from famous Vimy Ridge, Passchendaele, Ypres, and wherever the rugged fighters met the Hun.

Though America has been in the fighting only a year, there is a long list of trophies taken by the Yanks. Among them are "whiz-bangs," eight inch howitzers, trench howitzers, field guns of 120 caliber, machine guns, automatic rifles, and a whole armory of war implements.

The exhibit will all be in place—seventeen carloads of it at least—by Sept. 1. On Labor day there will be an immense parade, a combination of patriotism and labor enthusiasm, which is expected to eclipse anything Chicago has yet seen. On that day the gates will be thrown open, and for two weeks Chicago will take lessons in war from men who have been there. For with the exhibits come men who know all about them and their histories.

MAKER OF MEN.

The strength of the opposition to preparedness and its essential factor, universal military training, was not in the little group of pacifist impracticables who founded "unions opposed to militarism" and cackled shrilly about the capitol. It was partly in the optimistic indifference of a generation spared the trial of war and forgetful of their forefathers' experience. But it was also found in a misconception of what military training and discipline mean.

The average American disliked the thought of military training because he thought it would rob him of his independence and of his individuality. He disliked a uniform because it meant to him not the highest form of public service, the manliest devotion to his own highest ideals as expressed in his country, but only an enforced abolition of the right to wear what he pleased and be what he pleased. He resented the military salute because he misunderstood what it meant, taking it as a sign of inferiority or servitude and a negation of the American principle that all men are created equal. He thought of military training and discipline in the light of what he read about the insolence of Prussian lieutenants and the brutality of Prussian sergeants. He did not think of the democratic universal service of the army of republican France, and he did not trouble to find out what democratic training and discipline might be.

But this array of fallacies which bristled between the American people and the idea of universal training has been gradually battered down by an invasion of facts and experience. The American training camp has been a revelation to the people of what universal training may be in a democracy, not merely a defense of the nation from the peril of invasion and conquest but also an inspiring experience to the individual.

The American people are discovering what training and discipline in the conception of American officers are. Let any one read the remarkable little volume on "Leadership and Military Training" by Lieut. Col. (now Brig. Gen.) Lincoln C. Andrews, who helped Gen. Wood found the first military training camp for civilians at Plattsburg before the war. This is the work of an American soldier, an American psychologist, and an American democrat of the strictest strain. His exposition of the principles of democratic training and discipline is the exact antithesis of what we conceive the Prussian system to be. Its foundation stone is what? The abolition of individual will? Not at all. Gen. Andrews—and he expresses the American military principle as it is being applied to the training of the American citizen soldier today by the best officers—goes straight to the soldier's self-respect. He appeals to it. He inspires it. Instead of seeking to master the will of the soldier he seeks to direct it to honorable objects. His purpose is not to make a machine but to make a man, a man in the full, the highest sense of the word, the citizen ready to sacrifice himself not under compulsion of a master but under the inspiration of the principles and ideals of a freeman.

Read Gen. Andrews' "Leadership and Military Training" and visit such a camp as Camp Grant. You will have a new conception of military training. This is the making of men, of citizens who will be the vital strength of a great nation because they have learned self-control and self-respect, because they have learned to think of something higher than their own selfish concerns and not only to think of it but to work efficiently for it and to identify themselves with it. The spirit of such a work and such a place is an inspiration. It is a vision of what democracy ought to be, of what democratic citizens should be and may be and must be if democracy is to thrive and be worth the price.

President Wilson has declared that America makes war to make the world safe for democracy, and now we learn from believable sources that he is preparing to perpetuate and to expand the great system of citizen character development which universal military training is in fact, as our great camps are demonstrating. Thus a statesmanly conception is rounded out. If we fight to make the world safe for democracy we also work to make democracy a living reality at home.

Universal military training as conceived and developed in America will be the education of the democratic citizen, the people's university, a maker of men, of citizens, of patriots.

PROMOTIONS.

In the excitement of wartime an act of conspicuous disinterestedness on the part of one of the distinguished officers of the army has been given less attention that it deserves. We refer to Gen. Crowder's refusal to be promoted to a lieutenant generalcy by act of congress. This modest officer might well have accepted the honor, for his administration of the office of provost marshal general has been one of the outstanding successes of our war preparations. The task of directing the draft of an enormous army with no precedents or preparations was titanic, and Gen. Crowder, although he generously insisted upon sharing the credit for accomplishment with his associates of a large organization, has earned special distinction.

We trust it will soon come to him in circumstances which will induce him to accept it.

We speak of circumstances, because while a most honorable generosity and modesty led Gen. Crowder to decline a special distinction now, the proposal raised an old question of which we may hear more later both as to army and navy promotions. There always has been a certain jealousy between the line and staff and this has sometimes reflected itself very crudely, as in the recent debate in congress over the proposed promotion of the head of the marine corps to be lieutenant general. THE TRIBUNE objected to this promotion solely because it was disproportionate and without relation to any general plan. The marine corps is not large enough to justify the rank of lieutenant general, and the attempt to raise Gen. Barnett, an able and deserving officer, had its initiative in congress or among his friends and admirers. It is highly important not to legislate in this irresponsible piecemeal way, which resolves itself quickly into a contest of personal or political pull. In such a contest the faithful line officer, at the front or at sea, is pretty sure to suffer.

On the other hand, we have no sympathy with the distinction drawn in the congressional debate so sensationally between active officers and "swivel chair" generals. It is an unjust and unpractical distinction. There are very few men now in the high "swivel chair" positions who wouldn't give their eye teeth to get to the front. They are serving in the bureaus and staff positions because they are ordered there, and they should not be penalized for this compulsory service. Service in the higher ranks does not involve a serious question of personal danger and promotions should be bestowed in both the army and navy upon a sound and consistent estimate of responsibility and large achievement. In our opinion, Gen. Crowder's job is of lieutenant general's size, but not Gen. Barnett's job. If our general staff is developed to include, as has been urged, a chief of artillery, of infantry, of cavalry, and of air service, they might be given that rank. But all this should be provided for consistently, without reference to personalities, upon a well considered plan approved by our military and naval authorities.

In the lower grades, on the other hand, we believe too little attention is being paid to the factor of combatant service. Officers who have been long at the front and who have proved fit are not promoted, while training camp graduates are given higher rank and men in noncombatant jobs flourish with majorities and captaincies. We are aware from many sources of information that there is justified resentment over the failure to work out a fairer system of promotion. Present conditions should be corrected promptly. They are bad for morale, both of the forces and the people back of the forces.

POLITICS AND TAXATION.

It was largely the political aspects of last year's taxation program that prevented the drafting of a scientific and well ordered revenue law. The discussion in both the house and senate turned on questions of political expediency rather than on questions of the soundest principles of taxation. There was at that time no lack of expert advice; there was no good reason why congress should not have taken advantage of the best judgment of not only men of practical affairs but also students of economic theory.

The circumstances of the final drafting of the revenue bill indicate how much more the passage of the revenue law was controlled by considerations of politics than by common sense and good judgment. After the house and senate had deliberated on the bill for several months, after many florid and provocative speeches had been made, the bill was sent to conference, where in a brief period of days an entirely new measure was drafted and reported out.

Now, there can be no question that if the discussion that took so many weeks both in the house and the senate was designed for anything except its political effect, congress would not have accepted the conference report without objection. The plain fact is that the conference report retained nearly all the bad features of both the house and senate bills, and the only reason for their retention was the belief that they represented a compromise among various political factions. After the proceeding had reached this stage the majority were willing to vote for the measure with their eyes shut, thus following the example of Mr. Kitchin.

During the present session of congress there is likely to be a repetition of the proceedings of last year. The taxation bill is now before the ways and means committee of which Mr. Kitchin is chairman. There is apparently the same desire to follow the line of least resistance, politically speaking, that was in evidence last year.

To the layman it would seem that the best politics might be served by adopting the most expert advice in matters involving, as taxation does, the well-being of the entire nation. An adjournment of politics in affairs of this kind is even more important than in the election of men to the house and senate.

Editorial of the Day

THE NEW YORK REPUBLICANS.

[From the New York Times.]

It will be a hard matter to find any fault with the quality of patriotism displayed by New York Republicans in their state convention, which met at Saratoga yesterday. All of the addresses were lofty in tone and were emphatic in their demand that all the people, regardless of political views, should support the war to the utmost. The New York Republicans were right in their view that the administration can be strengthened in its present program. That being true, there is no reason to feel that Republicans in congress would hamper the president or interfere with any plan that means putting even an extra ounce of energy into the fight. This is not the war of any political party and no party has any right to consider it as an asset.

Public interest in the New York convention centered in the speech of Mr. Roosevelt. The report that his youngest son had just been killed in battle placed him in the attitude of a father who has given much. The speaker did not ask for sympathy, but he did demand that those who have died shall not have died in vain. There is sound Americanism in his declaration:

"Our young men have gone to the other side—very many of them to give up in their joyous prime all the glory and all the beauty of life for the prize of death in battle for a lofty ideal. Now while they are defending you, can't we, men and women at home, make up our minds to try to insist in public and private on a loftier idealism here at home? I am asking for an idealism which shall find expression beside the hearthstone and in the family, and in the councils of the state and nation. And I ask you to see that when those who have gone abroad to endure every species of hardship, to risk their lives, to give their lives—when those of them who live come home, that they shall come home to a nation which we, by our actions, have made a nation they can be proud to have fought for and to have died for."

The fathers and mothers of the men across the sea can heartily agree with this, and those who have sent no one abroad agree with the spirit of such doctrine if they are to be found worthy of those brave lads who defend them on the field of battle.

No less valuable and striking was Mr. Roosevelt's insistence for a right kind of peace, "a peace conditioned upon the complete overthrow of Germany and the removal of all threat of German dominion." The country will stand with him in his declaration that "we must treat agitation for premature or inconclusive peace as treason to the republic."

EASILY ARRANGED.

"How are we going to get any quotations out of these press notices?" asked the theater's advertising man. "The most generous of them says, 'This is not a very good show.'"

"Well," replied the manager, "for bill board purposes you'll have to condense it a little."

"How?"

"Just leave out the word 'not.'"—Washington Star.

THE VETERAN

BY PRIVATE HAROLD R. PEAT.

Late Third Battalion, First Canadian Overseas Contingent.

HE was to be 18 the month after he enlisted. He has been over there two years now. Eighteen years of age, still growing, still filling out, still but a boy, yet a veteran. Veterans—how we conjure up visions of them. White bearded men, stooped a little, limping a little, sight a little dim, hearing a trifle dull, voices a little quavering in tone. Veterans such as these we know, drawing worn and bent shoulders proudly and painfully up as the flag goes by, stepping with pathetic jauntiness to the strains of an old time war march.

The veteran of today is another matter. In years, it is the exception when he is 45. He may be gray of hair, dim of sight, hard of hearing, halting in step and not much more than a boy.

He is a problem, the veteran—this youthful hero who is a man in mentality, years ahead of his age. He is a problem whose solution lies in himself, coöperating with the folk at home, and the folk at home coöperating with him. He has offered his life for an ideal; he has been called on to give only an arm, a leg, eyes, hearing, a lung, or general health. He is back from where he started and he has to start again. How is it to be done?

THERE are 1,000,000 pensioned men in England alone at the present day. There are 7,000 permanently disabled back in the city of Toronto alone. At the Toronto annual exhibition of 1917 there was a parade—I saw it, and though I am a pensioned and partly crippled returned man myself, I dropped salt tears at the sight—a parade of sixty automobiles, fine, many cylindered cars, shining with fresh lacquer and polish, driven for the most part by girls, and each automobile was crowded to the limit with men, each minus an arm, a leg, each man smiling, but each man a duty on the shoulders of a grateful and willing country.

The returned soldier is a problem not easy of solution. He went away from his home town an ordinary, every day average man, with all his limbs and all his faculties, nerves an unknown quantity, certainly after he secured the fitness of intensive training.

He comes back after a day, a week, a month, or years in the trenches. He returns after facing death for himself and bestowing death on his enemy. He has killed in self-defense, but it changes him. He has seen outrages, for we are not fighting a clean foe, we are fighting Germans. He has seen a pal tortured or the body of a woman done to disgraceful death. He has lived as a cave man, grabbing under ground, consorting with rats and horrors of nature which only graves produce. He has plunged forward, bayonet in hand, red rage in his heart, to press home a charge, he has tramped on the forms of comrades and trod on bodies of enemies piled too thick to avoid in the mad race onward.

He has lived in swamps of mud and prayed to oozy messes of water, ice, and pestilence. Then he has come home. There has been a merciful interval of hospital. Firm bed, soft sheets, clean blankets, gay coverlet. Soft voiced ministering women, capable doctors; he has been tended, cared for, healed in so far as he ever will be. He has been entertained by friends who are yet strangers, and now he has come home.

The government which fed him, clothed him, and stood by him on the battlefield gives him a paper—he is no longer a soldier. Then he receives yet another paper, and each month a check—mostly a small check. It would take a lot of money to pension to the full a million men for what they have done.

THE Great War Veterans' Association of Canada is handling the question of getting work for veterans and handling the problem of getting jobs which suit individual men. Take the land question. The government generously gives land to old soldiers; it advances money at nominal rates; it gives free training at agricultural colleges, and yet the government handles the matter from the mentality of the individual.

These returned men have been living in closest communion with comrades for years or months down into the depths with them or up into flights of idealism; they have become increasing and wholly gregarious. These men cannot be, dare not be planted on lonely homesteads miles from anywhere, far from touch with other humans like themselves. If left alone the returned soldier will brood on the things of horror he has seen, which die down and flicker out when cheerful company prevails. That is why the Canadian government and the Veterans' club are working on the question of community holdings and settlements. The land would be largely a revivifying work for the men, but not the life of the solitary pioneer.

The returned man is difficult to handle. He has broadened his outlook on life, his opinions are definite, they bear weight and he demands attention. Each veteran wishes to say his say, yet though developed in individuality he has a pronounced sense of comradeship, an ever ready hand held out to the other fellow who has fought side by side with him. The veteran has thought for himself. He has had a long period of time in which to adjust his vision, his perspective is better, the angle of his view as an old soldier is totally different from that which was his as a civilian. He has fought for this country which vaguely before the war he knew as his, but which now he knows very definitely is his by right of inheritance and by right of blood purchase.

THEN there is the lesser question of welcoming home the returned and convalescent man, an important question also. Some three years ago the mayor in Winnipeg had a caller. He greeted the stranger kindly.

"I am a returned soldier. Last fall I was a recruit sent off to France with band playing, folk cheering, flags waving. Yesterday I arrived back—ill, weary, maimed. I arrived to a station empty of a friendly face. I had not yet received my discharge money and I spent last night on the streets. Are we all to return in this fashion?"

The mayor was horrified. No one had remembered the broken men who come back, not in joyous battalions, but in ones and twos and scattered bunches. Things are different in Winnipeg today. In receptions it was the pioneer city of the Dominion, and throughout Canada reception committees meet all newcomers. There are civilians, men and women, in the committee and there are earlier returned men already members of the G. W. V. A. Automobiles are lent and are in waiting to convey the men to their homes after arrival; if they have no homes or are passing through a larger town to a more distant destination, then they are taken to the association rooms, where a bed is provided and comfortable meals, where money is advanced if pension or discharge pay is delayed. There they are entertained, there every effort is made to let the boys feel once more at a home which is a real home in the broadest sense—a place of warm, kindly hearts.

The boys pay membership fees to the Veterans' association, but the amount is not sufficient for the disbursements. The balance depends upon a grateful country.

That in very brief outline is something of what Canada is doing. Canada's men began to return a couple of months or less after they had left. They were in the fight early. England had cripples and blinded back to her in the later weeks of August, 1914. Preparation and prosecution in such cases had to go forward together. It is working out successfully though slowly, but how much better had there been time to organize, plan, and now develop.

Every man and woman can help in the forethought and preparation. Every man and woman must help. There is nothing surely too much to do for your boy who has faced death, gone down into the depths, and returned to you. Remember some one else's boy is as dear as yours.

DIARRHEA IN BABIES.

A WEEKLY bulletin of the Chicago health department begins with the statement: "July, August, and September are hazardous months for your baby." During the preceding week in that city thirty-eight babies under 2 years of age were recorded as having died from diarrhea. That the number was much larger than that is shown by the statement that 101 children under 2 years of age, including eighty-eight under 1 year of age, died from all causes. Certainly more than half the 101 died from diarrhea. There is no way of knowing how many children were sick with diarrhea but did not die.

Certainly, diarrhea is the most prevalent disease among babies. Probably two-thirds of all the illnesses of babies under 1 year of age are due to diarrhea. Eating and growing is much the most important work the baby has to do. Diarrhea results from fault somewhere in the realm of eating.

When health commissioner of Chicago I learned that the babies who died from summer complaint in August and September had diarrhea during June. Although the baby death rate during that month was not high, a great many babies had diarrheas. I learned that when a baby had diarrhea during June and the disease was allowed to run the baby was pretty certain to die during August or September.

Dr. Kerley puts the matter better still. He says: "While making rounds early one morning in June (about thirty years ago) the matter of summer diarrheas was being discussed by the resident physician, the late Dr. C. E. Kimball. I asked why there was such a large summer mortality in an institution situated as this was, at a considerable elevation in an open country, constructed on the cottage and dormitory plan, with the additional advantage of good milk, favorable environment, good nursing, and competent medical attendance. His reply was: 'Take your paper and write the names of the children I indicate.' I did so and at the completion of the round he directed me to keep the list of thirty names, saying that these children probably would not survive the summer. Seeking an explanation, I remarked that they were not delicate or athreptic (poorly nourished). 'No,' he replied, 'they look well, but they have foolish, ignorant mothers and susceptible intestines. They have had frequent attacks of diarrhea and indigestion during the winter and spring. The mothers steal food from their own table and give it to the children when the orderlies and nurses are out of the wards. These children have but little intestinal resistance and will give us our first fatal diarrheal cases when the hot weather comes.'

"I kept my list and found that the accuracy of his prediction was startling. But four of the children named survived the summer. Since that time I have had abundant opportunity to observe that the children who have had frequent attacks of intestinal indigestion during the colder months furnish our severe cases during the summer."

A most important feature then in prophylaxis is to teach the mother how to feed and care for the child all the year round in order that by keeping well the child may maintain a high grade of intestinal resistance.

The simplest form of bowel trouble in babies some physicians call dyspepsia. In this condition the food is not agreeing with the child, but, in spite of that, the child is thriving moderately. There may be spells of colic. Regurgitation may go to the point of vomiting. There is an occasional green stool, an occasional diarrhea, mucus is found in the stools with some frequency, the stools may be sour; frequently the urine smells like ammonia. In this condition the food is generally too rich for the child, but as the symptoms are mild and the child is getting older all the time the chances are good that if matters are allowed to drift presently the child will be old enough to digest and assimilate the food, whereupon the symptoms will gradually lessen and finally disappear. This policy of drifting is moderately safe in winter, but it is hazardous in hot weather. In summer the rule is that if the urine becomes ammoniacal or mucus appears in the stools or the stools are green or are sour, the strength of the milk mixture should be lowered and kept lower until the symptoms have disappeared. In fact, a good summer rule is to lessen the food, even though the baby is thriving, whenever a hot spell comes.

Much of the food goes to make heat. There is no way of avoiding that. In cold weather this heat is needed, but not so in summer. It is just as well that the baby does not have the regular weekly increase in weight during hot spells. If the mother plays safe by giving less food during such spells the increase in weight in the cooler weeks which follow will be great enough to compensate. For instance, if a baby is 7 months old and taking a milk mixture for its age, let the mother go back to a six months' formula. Safety first is wise in hot weather.

Next in seriousness is acute intestinal indigestion. In this condition diarrhea is prominent. The stools are persistently green, there is mucus and there may be a little blood. The temperature may go to 104 degrees, and the child is restless and in pain occasionally, but, in spite of these symptoms, the child does not seem to be much sick. Very little provocation is needed to send a baby's temperature to 104 degrees and to cause restlessness. Such cases are much more likely to be treated lightly than they are to cause undue uneasiness.

Just this group of cases are those which, neglected, lead to dysentery and cholera infantum. Kerley says that 99 per cent of cases of serious bowel trouble give a history of a mild diarrheal attack preceding the severe condition. He says: "The time to treat these cases of intestinal indigestion, in order to secure the most effective prevention of grave disease, is before the physician sees the patient. The reduction in the mortality rests in the education of the mother to the point of recognizing that a loose green stool is a danger signal. When it occurs she is to give a dose of castor oil (two teaspoonfuls), stop the bottle, or stop the nursing and give the baby boiled water or barley water until the physician can see the patient.

"Any physician who has children under his care, whether in hospital, institution, dispensary, or private practice, and who does not so instruct the nurse or mother fails in his obligation as a practitioner of medicine. These babies occasionally are without appetite, but that is far from being the rule. The rule is that a baby with acute intestinal indigestion wants to nurse or to take the bottle at short intervals. If the mother yields she will be in serious trouble. Any milk which goes into the child's stomach and intestines will add fuel to the flame. If feeding is persisted in cholera infantum or dysentery is very apt to result. The persistent appeal for the bottle or breast results in part from restlessness and in part from thirst. Water will satisfy the thirst better than milk will. If the mother has trained her baby so that it expects food whenever it is restless she will have a hard time when her baby gets acute intestinal indigestion, but regardless of the trouble she must go through with the program. She must not feed milk however much the baby may cry and fret."

Here then are two cardinal points: First, if the baby in hot weather has ammoniacal urine, a green stool, or other evidence of dyspepsia, decrease the strength of the food. Second, if the baby at any season of the year gets up a diarrhea with green stools and mucus, stop milk and give a dose of castor oil. If the baby is breast fed, generally it will be enough to give a dose of castor oil and to keep the child from the breast for from twelve to thirty-six hours. During this time it can take boiled water or cereal water as freely as it desires. It may be necessary to sweeten the water slightly.

In bottle fed babies it may be necessary to give no milk for as long as five days. During this time oatmeal and barley water should be given freely. Some children can take a thin oatmeal gruel or other thin cereal gruel. After the trouble has apparently come under control, a tablespoonful of boiled skimmed milk can be added to a feeding of gruel. If this causes no trouble by the time of the second feeding thereafter two tablespoonsful may be added. Thus gradually the strength of the milk mixture used before the attack is attained.

It is not good judgment for the parents to give any diarrhea mixture or loose bowel mixture of any sort. One or two doses of castor oil is far enough for them to go. If more medication is indicated a physician should have charge of it.

Among other directions for the prevention of serious bowel trouble in babies are these: No milk is to be fed to a baby unless it is clean, fresh, and cold. A mother cannot raise any large proportion of her babies if she buys milk from careless dealers or buys milk at a bargain because it is cheaper than other milk. Babies cannot be kept healthy unless there is an icebox to keep the milk in. Any man can take a small wooden box, a tin can, a few newspapers, and a little sawdust or shavings and make an icebox in an hour. If sawdust shavings are not handy a little dirt heated in the stove until dry will do. Every health department gives away directions for making household iceboxes.

If a mother is not certain that the milk is sweet, fresh, clean, and cold, she should play safety first. Unless she knows that the milk has been pasteurized she had better set the bottle in hot water and pasteurize it. The mother should wash her hands with soap and water before fixing the baby's food or cleaning the milk bottles.

The soiled napkins should be placed at once in a covered vessel, preferably in a 2 per cent formalin solution.

Flies must not be allowed in a room where the baby is.

And, lastly, the mother must recognize green stools and loose bowels as danger signals.

Kerley says: "Comparatively few cases of intestinal disease seem to be much sick at the outset. There may be vomiting, several green, watery stools, and a slight elevation of temperature. Prompt treatment at this time, even in a crowded tenement, usually means prompt recovery. When treatment is delayed and the administration of milk is continued severe illness is almost the invariable result."

There is not much use in writing about the more severe forms of infantile diarrhea since these are cared for, or should be in all cases by physicians and nurses. Acute dysentery is due to infection with some bacillus. A considerable percentage of the cases is due to infection with some one of the dysentery bacilli. In this disease there is a good deal of blood and mucus in the stools. Passages are frequent, sometimes as often as once an hour. There may be vomiting. There is considerable fever in most cases. The child has the appearance of being very sick. Milk must be withdrawn from the diet. Since the disease continues for several days and usually for two or three weeks, it is necessary to give some food. Gruels are commonly given. Some children take soy bean soups and gruels well. Some take what is known as Eiwiss milk. Some can take buttermilk. Medication and, for that matter, direction of the feeding must be left to the physician or nurse, or both.

CHOLERA INFANTUM—The severe symptoms of this disease are generally preceded by a few days of ordinary diarrhea. Then the severe symptoms develop suddenly. Vomiting is a prominent symptom. The bowel movements are copious, green, and watery. They occur with great frequency. There may or may not be fever. The prostration is extreme. The child becomes hollow eyed and the features become drawn and pinched within a few hours. It is probable that cholera infantum is due at least to two factors which may act jointly. One is spoiled food and, of course, spoiled milk in the main. The other is heat. Cholera infantum has been classed as a form of heat stroke.

HABITUAL BAD BREATH.

R. J. B. writes: "I wish you would let me know in your column if foul, unpleasant breath is the result of temporary physical disturbance or whether it is the result of a stationary illness. I would also appreciate to hear if it could be remedied in both assumed causes and how in each one?"

REPLY.

Foul breath may be due to ozena or bad tonsils. It is generally due to absorption from the intestinal canal. If the trouble lies in the nose or tonsils treatment must be directed there. If it is caused by absorption from the intestines the diet must be changed and the bowels must be trained to move two to five times a day.

LIGHTING SERVICE PROMISED.

Chicago, July 31.—[To the Friend of the People.]—From Sixty-first street to Sixty-third street on South Morgan street we have had no street lights burning for over three weeks. We have had a new lighting system installed in this neighborhood since last fall, but no lights. F. W. S.

The lamp posts for the new lighting system referred to were installed last fall and the balance of the construction work is now being completed. It is hoped these lamps will be placed in service within the next sixty or ninety days.
WILLIAM G. KEITH, Commissioner.

SIGN SECURELY FASTENED.

Chicago, July 31.—[To the Friend of the People.]—I noticed, as I rode on the Oak Park "L," that the sign at 236 West Lake street has become loosened and is liable to fall at any time. F. G.

Inspection reveals the fact that sign is low at east end, which gives the appearance of being loose and insecure, but it is fastened to building and directly above fire escape it is anchored on to level of third floor. Our inspector reports same as being safe and secure on this date. CHARLES BOSTROM,
Commissioner of Buildings.

ALLEY NOW CLEAN.

Chicago, Aug. 1.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Is there a city ordinance prohibiting the maintenance of garbage in open wooden barrels in residence districts?

Two open barrels of this kind are kept in the alley at 222 North Sacramento boulevard. J. C. B.

Alley is now clean and in good condition around the premises complained of.
F. S. MITCHELL,
Superintendent of Streets.

DIRT HAS BEEN REMOVED.

Chicago, Aug. 1.—[To the Friend of the People.]—Will you please advise what can be done to have the stacks of manure and other street sweepings removed permanently from between the curb and sidewalk at the corner of Clifton avenue and Montrose boulevard? T. O.

Street dirt has been removed and arrangements made that should do away with any further cause for complaint.
F. S. MITCHELL,
Superintendent of Streets.

COLLECTING JUDGMENT.

Chicago, July 30.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—I have an express [illegible] on. Last December I did some work for a bricklaying contractor. He refused to pay my bill. I filed suit in small claims court and was given judgment through default. After taking out writ of execution he still refuses to pay. What method would you advise to make collection?
R. S.

See Deputy Bailiff Woods in the bailiff's office where you had the execution issued. Whether you can collect or not depends on the property, etc., owned by the defendant.

LEGALITY OF MARRIAGE.

Chicago, July 28.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—My brother, who was a resident of South Dakota four years ago, was divorced there. Three months later he came to Illinois and remarried and resided here, neither party being a resident of Illinois. Would this marriage be legal here? E. E.

If the divorce was granted on one of the grounds mentioned in the Illinois statute there is some ground for saying that the parties may not marry here until the year has expired.

SUPPORT OF CHILDREN.

Burlington, Ia., July 28.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—My husband inherited a considerable sum from his father, but he has squandered it and is practically penniless. He has three children to support. What action can I take in this matter. When minor children inherit a farm and the father fails to support them, can the rent of the farm be used for their support? APPRECIATION FROM CHILE.

Fond du Lac, Wis., July 31.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Thinking you might like to see these comments on your paper from one of its readers, I am sending the inclosed from my brother in Chile.

It is really a postscript to a letter he had written and was in convenient form for sending on to you.
ALICE SCHILLING.

Following is the letter referred to:

SANTIAGO DE CHILE.—This letter would not be complete without another, thanks for THE TRIBUNES I get from you on every mail. They are the most illuminating periodicals that come to me, the more especially as I am in complete sympathy with THE TRIBUNE in point of view.

We get in the Spanish papers here a pretty good summary, unedited, of what is happening in Europe and some general facts from home, but THE TRIBUNE fills in the gaps with the details which make it lifelike. The account of a new $750,000 apartment house in Chicago, with accommodations for thirteen families, tells volumes about the present stage of war activities.

The detailed accounts of what happens in congress throw a flood of light on the war, and even poor George Creel is illuminating, when one gets him in proper perspective. These things come out in the papers.

You would probably be surprised to know how much these papers tell me about our army in France and also about my own business. As I have said before, they are greatly appreciated.
GEORGE E. SCHILLING.

WASTE ON SOUTH WATER STREET.

Chicago, Aug. 1.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—In reply to Mrs. T. G. Oliver's letter, in the "Voice of the People." The market has not been flooded with cherries or berries this season, and furthermore, no fruit has ever been destroyed on South Water street intentionally to enhance the price.

Farmers near Chicago, in many instances, gave from one-third to one-half of their crop of cherries for the picking of the fruit alone. Others were less fortunate and could not get help, so the fruit went to waste.

Your husband as a railway engineer must draw a good salary, and it is difficult to understand why you are unable to pay $3.50 to $4 for a sixteen quart case of good cherries or berries.

For your special benefit I will add that even at present prices the probabilities are that your husband could not pick enough cherries in a day if they were given to him for nothing to equal his present daily wage.
E. P. GRIDLEY,
25 West South Water street.

HE MISSED "THE TRIBUNE."

Chicago, July 31.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—I am in receipt of a letter from a soldier friend of mine, Joseph W. Sanborn, lieutenant One Hundred and Eighth engineers, A. E. F., in which he writes:

"I have not received a letter or a mail since I left Camp Logan. I would give a dollar for a SUNDAY TRIBUNE, as I have hard work getting any news out of these French papers."

Sanborn was a railroad engineer for the Northwestern and on a layoff studied dentistry and was at work at this when he enlisted. FRED A. HAYNES.

THE AIRPLANE SCANDAL.

Chicago, Aug. 1.—[Editor of The Tribune.]—Some time since I read an account of how Charles E. Hughes, at the head of a congressional committee investigating airplane production, found at a certain plant that nothing had been turned out completed and that work had been delayed on every possible pretext; that three-quarters of the names of the employés—or, at least, of the skilled workmen—were of Germanic origin, and intimated that there was going to be a shake-up and genuine investigation in order to place the blame.

Now I see that a lot of defective planes have reached France and been condemned by Gen. Pershing.

May I ask if in some special article or editorial you will not dwell upon this matter, for I feel sure there are thousands of your readers who have the same thoughts in mind as I had when I read this latest news item. If a particular manufactory was turning out defective and constantly delayed work and was under severe investigation then how is it that these planes were ever sent to our boys in France? And why do we hear nothing further of that investigation if conditions were as bad as they were indicated to be? R. A. SUTHERLAND.

A SPANISH VIEW

By Ammando Palacio Valdes

Sig. Valdes is a member of the Spanish academy. This article from El Liberal of Madrid is the translation of Mrs. Richard Balzac.

NOT all the asphyxiating gases that emanate from the German trenches, not the still more asphyxiating Teuton rhetoric employed to assert their morality, shall extinguish rebellious truth. The monstrous war being waged by an amazed humanity was long meditated, prepared, and provoked by Germany with the express purpose of domination, moral and material, over all other nations.

This being so apparent that there is no denial possible, those Spaniards among us who still sympathize with Germany invoke in defense of their sentiment injuries we at times more or less remote suffered at the hands of the French and English, which is like the wolf in the fable who proclaimed his right to devour or allow some one else to devour the little lamb because of grievances received from its father.

At all times and in all regions of the world, nations have fought with their neighbors, never with those far removed. If Berlin were close to Bordeaux or Lisbon we would have had as many scraps with the Germans as we have had with the French and Portuguese. Austria and Germany, who are not only neighbors but brothers, have fought differences among themselves up to the present time. When we abandon a spirit of hate and adopt reasoning, we argue very differently according to each case.

Against England is employed the argument of her wealth; she possesses rich colonies, immense territory in all the five parts of the globe, while Germany (a nation as highly civilized and meritorious) has none of these. Why? They who indignantly ask this question in Spain, many of them rich land owners, unconsciously employ the same arguments against England as are used by the Socialists against them: We are as worthy as you, you are rich, we are poor, why should this be so? Robbers, release those lands which you unjustly retain.

THIS argument might hold if England were incapable of colonizing. Would these colones be better off, more content, in the hands of Germany? Put the question to them. Against France our argument is religion. This nation, which decreed the separation of church from the state, as in all other civilized countries except Spain, deserves to be punished. Even if this were just, would it not be unjust to apply the chastisement to the blameless? In France today the masses are of Catholic faith, maintaining their church with the same decorum, voluntarily and independently of the government.

No one has ever made France responsible for the bloody excesses of the Commune, for the assassinations perpetrated by Robespierre and Marat. Why hold against her now the acts of a past administration? And let us not forget how in that "impious country" Christian thought radiates a marvelous light, spreading itself throughout the world, and that France not only has today a group of spiritual thinkers, with Boutroux at its head, combating with their glorious works the wise materialists of Germany, the Wundts, the Haeckels, and Ostwalds, but also a phalanx of eminent Catholic defenders, many of them priests, whose books are consoling all the faiths in Europe.

Let us not forget that many of these good fathers are at the front in Alsace and Flanders, listening stupefied and hurt to the unjust accusations thrust against their country by many who boast of being of their faith.

The argument against Russia is that she has not kept pace with civilization. Poor Russia, what armanent has she? What strategic railways; where are her asphyxiating gases? They eat with their knives and are little better than savages. We must teach them the use of firearms and table manners. Those same savages provided with iron bars instead of rifles, we learn from the German press, fought successfully against the whole Austrian army and more than one-third of the Germans for nearly three years.

BUT the case against Belgium is the most quixotic of all. This Belgium, what possessed her to go into this headstrong adventure? How dare she confront colossal Germany? Had she allowed the kaiser's troops to pass she had met a better fate, a pocket jingling with gold coins, and, possibly, who knows, after the war, a little present from Almighty William of a French province.

This is what we hear in Spain. Germany disdains even to argue about it. That roaring automatic will pronounce only the words "We shall," but from all the corners of the world where live men of true mettle the answer has come back, "You shall not." It is a case of mental disintegration, smashing the gear of free reasoning of the masses and delivering them over to the whims of the hypnotizer. The hypnotizers of the German masses are the leaders in politics and the Prussian army, backed by the cowardice of some of their writers.

"Guard against the dictates of your hearts as from an enemy," they are cautioned. "Shoot down priests, destroy monuments, violate women, asphyxiate children, lose no occasion to terrorize the enemy," and we see pacific and peace loving German citizens, kind and affectionate fathers of families, shooting, violating, pilfering, asphyxiating; they are told to kill prisoners and they do it.

Such a state of moral penury rather inspires pity than hate. They are dominated men and the horrors should be charged up to their masters rather than to them.

Like everything that touches for an instant this little planet inhabited by men, this war also will pass. The dense cloud darkening today the whole of Europe will fade away into a clear blue sky.

Mother Earth will drink the blood, swallow up the bones, and immortal life will continue its mysterious functions.

Once more prairies will glow with beautiful flowers, the branches of majestic trees gently sway in the peaceful quiet of eventide, and God's song birds with glad trill welcome the rosy dawn of day. And what will be left of it all? Only a great shame, a great remorse.

The day will come—God grant it come soon—when these automatic assassins of women and children will come out of their hypnotic stupor and, horrified at themselves, will fall on their knees before their own children and pray for pardon for the disgrace they have brought upon their heads in seeking to outrage the honor of mankind before their youthful eyes, and in attempting to rout out from their hearts the one principle for which man can live and should die.

REALISM

by James Branch Cabell

YOU might reasonably refrain from the noble pleasure of praising in discussion of a neighbor's intellectual clarity, who ranked diamonds and charcoal as of equivalent worth, on the ground that both are composed of carbon. Yet radically, such confusion would be no more egregious than that made by the creative writer who mingles the observed truth and his private inventions, with very little more discrimination than is exercised in such blending by a prosecuting attorney. "Realists" gravely contend that their books are true to what they see in life. It is consoling to deduce, from the comparative infrequency of suicide, that the majority of mankind view life otherwise. And yet, in such novels a naive veracity is sometimes, beyond doubt, confusedly to be discerned among a multitude of other aesthetic offenses. For of course the mere fact of a thing's happening in nature does not affect in one way or another its right to happen in a novel. It is the part of the creative writer skillfully to make a selection from the truths in regard to his subject, rather than to foist them wholesale into a transient grant of electrotype. Facts which are not to his purpose he is at liberty to exit, or to color, or at a pinch to deny. He must, in short, create unhampered, and shape his petty universe with the fine freedom of omnipotence. The truth therein must be whatever he wills to be the truth, and not a whit more or less: and his observation of actual life is an account on which he ought, at most, to draw small cheques to tide him over difficulties.

For the creative artist must remember that his book is structurally different from life, in that, were there nothing else, his book begins and ends at a definite point, whereas the canons of heredity and religion forbid us to believe that life can ever do anything of the sort. He must remember that his art traces in ancestry from the tribal huntsman telling tales about the cave fire; and so, strives to emulate not human life, but human speech, with its natural elisions and falsifications. He must remember, too, that his main concern with the truth about normal existence is jealously to exclude it from his book. For "living" is to be conscious of an incessant series of less than momentary sensations, of about equal poignancy, for the most part, and of nearly equal unimportance.

Art attempts to marshal the shambling procession into trimness, to usurp the rôle of memory and convention in assigning to some of these sensations an especial prominence, and, in the old phrase, to lend perspective to the forest we cannot see because of the trees. Art, as long ago observed my friend, Mrs. Kennaston, is an expurgated edition of nature: at art's touch, too, "the drossy particles fall off and mingle with the dust." And if Dickens has performed his expurgation so as to improve on the original, he is deserving of our gratitude.

TO contest that Dickens has done so is futile. He has painted a clear-cut picture of the sort of world which he imagined he would like to inhabit. Questionless, his England is contiguous to Cloud-Cuckoo-Land, and its settlers intermarried with the Nepphelococcygians. There was never any one in human flesh so meticulously enamored of le mot juste as Mr. Pecksniff, so prolific in weird modern instances as the Wellers père et fils, nor so felicitously garrulous as Mrs. Wickleby: yet this need not prevent their being the best of company. As Dickens has himself suggested—to his subtle depiction of Mrs. Harris, which is quite in the method of Henry James—the nonexistence of a person detracts not at all from the merits of his or her conversation. The features of these people are overemphasized, as are those of any actor when he treads the stage, and the performance is all the better for it.

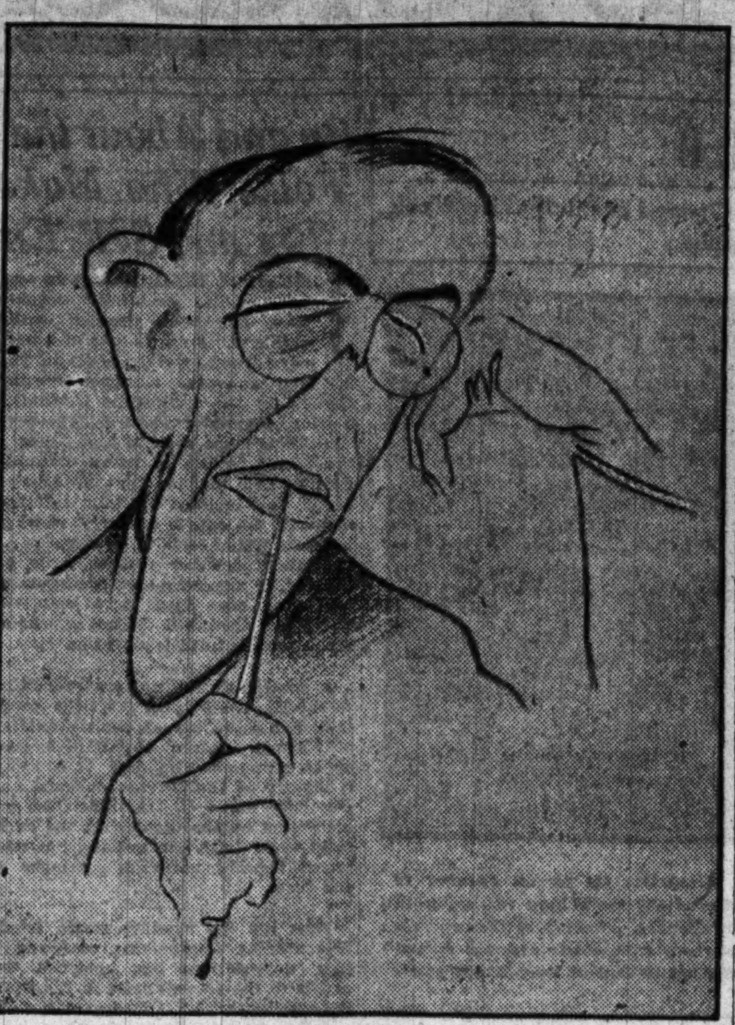
AND quaintly obsolete as it sounds, I am afraid there are still surviving a few of us old fogies who read Dickens with positive delight. We even hunt up an excuse or two in palliation. For although the humor of Dickens may, as we are credibly informed, degenerate into buffoonery, it has a provoking habit of making people laugh. His pathos may, even to the extent of a stylistic scandal, be palpably forced, but from uncritical eyes it has drawn at least a Mediterranean of salt water. So we old fogies let detractors bay their uttermost: the moon has spots on it, but it remains a creditable luminary; and it is a pitiable form of myopia, say we, that detects in a Belisarius only the holes in his toga.

Dickens very certainly has not depicted the real world in his writings, but therein has made us free of an infinitely more pleasant planet. He has endowed virtuous folk with a preternatural power of coming out of trouble with flying colors and congenial spouses, but the most equipoise to delinquent actuality. He may even have made all good women short and plump and fair, and all misguided females haughty and tall and dark: yet every artist has his mannerisms, and if Dickens chooses to make the possession of desirable traits a question of height and complexion, there, too, he improves upon unscrupulous life, which in these matters seems to have no principle whatever. Besides, in Dickens-Land the residents are entitled to their local customs and racial idiosyncrasies and patois and peculiar social standards, just as much as are the inhabitants of Austria and Abyssinia and Arden. Somewhat in this fashion run the excuses of us frivolous old fogies, who are a little too old to regard men and men's doings, even upon platforms, very seriously; and have lived through so many trials and responsibilities that those which remain to be encountered appear comparatively negligible, and much grave talk about them seems silly.

Of course, all this is "inartistic": it is the sort of conduct that grieved Flaubert and continues to upset the sensibility of Mr. George Moore as earnest minded persons stand ready to protest in columns. For Dickens very often shocks the young by his lack of interest in sexual irregularities. Yet Dickens probably knew more about novel writing than do such sagacious folk as lecture and publish without general detection. No doubt he has his quirks and whimsies, which are common to the despot of any country: but we who love him are fain to believe that the king can do no wrong. Perhaps that is begging the question: but then it is a question that should never have been raised. And if you can seriously debate "Is Dickens Obsolete?" already, in so far as you are concerned, he is obsolete as youth and April. For you have outgrown a novelist who "wallows naked in the pathetic," and is sometimes guilty of a vulgar sort of humor that makes people laugh, which, as we now know, is not the purpose of humor. Indeed, to many persons not Torquemada or the Four Evangelists can appear more remote in their way of thinking than does this novelist who shapes his plots with the long arm of coincidence, and never flies in the admiring foolish face of convention. For it depresses the conventionally "advanced" to see the man deal so liberally in cheerfulness: and they resent his happy-go-lucky methods of creating characters that seem more real to the judicious than the people we sit beside in street cars, and (upon the whole) more vital and worthy of consideration than the folk who "cannot read Dickens." For Dickens regarded life from a viewpoint, which is not at all modish just now, of unblushing optimism.

PRESIDENT WILSON—By Tirelli.



From "Il Protagonisti" by U. Tirelli, from the Italian-American News bureau.

"Carry On"

THERE is a short phrase of but two words in use at the front today that contains more real patriotism, more idea of self-sacrifice, and mor idealism than the entire English language put together.

In the cold, gray dawn on the battlefield through the rising mists the captain gathers his men about him and leads the charge across the grim desolation of No Man's Land. Halfway across a bullet lays him low; he turns to his first lieutenant, shouting, "Carry on!" And when a few yards farther on Fate overtakes the first lieutenant, young Brown—a mere stripling but 18 years of age—without a moment's hesitation carries on, only to fall at the edge of a trench. With a final effort he cries out, "Sergeant, take command; I'm done for. Carry on!" And so the grizzled sergeant, veteran of many years of war, carried on to final victory.

And as it is with men so is it with nations. When the Black Eagles stormed Belgium's gates she withstood them as long as she could, and then, with her dying gasp, turned to England and France, crying out, "Carry on!" And when the great gray hordes of the Huns swept relentlessly over Serbia and Montenegro the little kingdoms, dying, cried to their big allied brothers, "Carry on!" Today, worn and weary after three long years of fighting, England and France turn to us for encouragement, crying "Carry on!"

Americans, the burden is ours. Shall we not then let loose the full flood of our righteous wrath and ever press forward into the thickest of the Huns, crying out, "Carry on, America! Carry on!"

The TRIBUNE'S WEEKLY ALMANACK

AUGUST

Experience

GOLDENROD and white daisies; the noble architecture of lavender button rockets raised in miniature majesty to the sun; the green corn standing high and tasseled as full emblem of productivity; the old song of the tanager at dawn; the new song of the cicada at night.

Burnt fields and green, heavy woods, drowsy with heat and sleep and content; fields waving with grass; sumac red in its panicles; the helianthus, a yellow starred follower of the August sun.

Serenity with low song; contentment with the purring murmur; placidity with a sense of accomplishment; unrest, a page which has been turned; achievement, one which lies open; bereavement, one to be cut, read and experienced.

Sands which run in the monotony of ordained ways which may be good, may be melancholy, may be exquisite, may be malevolent, but, whatever else they are, must be certain.

A dial in the shadow of the wild rose which has changed its deep red bud for its deep red berry, its red promise for its red fruit, its exquisite promise for its full achievement; a dial which in the rose garden exults in the shadow that has recorded its experience; experience, recorded in sand and on the dial, which has no regrets but full perception, and even as it finds fewer grains and longer shadows, fruit where there were flowers and berries where there were buds, is full of life and serene.

LEAVES FROM THE NOTE-BOOK

of Henry J. Allen

MOTORING through a beautiful part of French Flanders one day this week, I picked up an English airman, who was walking to a neighboring town to "see a friend," as he said. He also explained that he was not allowed to use his own excellent transportation on personal trips, so he had started to walk thirty kilometers (about twenty miles). It was Sunday, he was young, and he said he had a feeling when he started out that some one would pick him up. When he saw an empty seat in my car he guessed that it was for him. He was a quaint sort of Englishman, with a surprising sense of humor and a lot of freckles, with the red hair which belongs to freckles. At one place we passed a group of German prisoners, and he fell to talking about the enormous appetite of the Germans, and also of their tendency to develop embonpoint. None of the prisoners had developed anything of the kind, and he said: "Look at 'em, the blighters, 'pon my soul they are developing quite some figures. They are not over eating, as their habit was in olden days."

A few moments later we passed a camp where an American soldier and an English "Tommy" apparently had reached the point in an international argument in which the fighting word had passed between them; some officers were separating them. As the American was being led away he was raging. "Tommy" was going rather more willingly.

Instances like this occur occasionally. The Americans and Englishmen quarrel with the frankness of blood brothers. The Englishman has a calm assumption of superiority which maddens us; we have a fresh and scornful cock-sureness that irritates him. When our men mingle with Tommy they speak frankly to him of his faults. Sometimes they rake up the past. The tendency isn't regarded as a serious matter. As the air officer looked at the panting, angry men he said: "Good fighting blood there on both sides. It won't require them long to get acquainted the way they take to each other. It will do our men good to have their conceit knocked out a bit."

England's past, as a matter of fact, has been scattered pretty much over the world in a way that has left a little feeling everywhere. As we drove away from the camp where we had just witnessed the international exchange between our soldier and Tommy, we passed the edge of the forest of Tresse, where, in the thirteenth century, the English had met and defeated the French. The air man described the battle as vividly as though he had seen it. The French had emerged from the forest into a soft area of ploughed ground. Their heavy armor weighed them down and put them at a disadvantage.

"The British mowed them down," said he.

"How?" said I.

"With their bows and arrows," he answered.

"There were two thousand on a side," he added, "and you can still go into that forest and see the ruins of the pavillion from which King Edward witnessed the great fight. Tourists were still going to see it up till four years ago. It must have been a (blank) of a fight." He used a qualifying adjective which I decline to insert, and we both laughed at the thought of men being mowed down by bows and arrows, although in that uncultured day I suppose it was regarded as rather an up-to-date form of slaughter. A little later we passed a cemetery where some fifty military graves had recently been made. Standing at the head of two of these graves were broken propeller shafts, indicating that they were the graves of air men. The merry light left my friend's good-looking blue eyes when he said: "Poor chaps, I hope they got their chance." Then he told me of a fight he was in a few days before; told it simply, graphically, almost impersonally. He said he had the "good fortune" to get above the German and got a "lucky shot" which sent the German machine blazing downward.

"How did you feel?" I asked, out of morbid curiosity.

"O," he replied, "I felt jolly glad of it."

* *

THERE are a lot of funny things happening. Not long ago I stood in a field tent and heard an officer at a telephone say clearly and distinctly: "Hello, central, give me Chicago." I pinched myself, and then I heard him say it again. For a moment I was thrilled to my toes. To think that out there 4,200 miles from Chicago a plain staff officer of the Q. M. department who had never been to West Point, and possibly had never been to Chicago, was daring to send his voice across all that void and trackless air.

Could he do it?

In less than a moment I heard him say: "Hello, Chicago, this is Salt Lake City calling." He uttered the unblushing falsehood as only a hardened criminal could. We were not at Salt Lake. Then he called up "Palm Beach," "Sleepy Hollow," "Oshkosh," "Louisville," and told them the same astounding lie—that he was at Salt Lake. He apparently had them fooled, for he did business with them all—business which had to do with the moving of ammunition, tents, wagon trains, medical supplies and big guns. When he got through, I felt it my duty to protest—"yes, I know it must seem queer to you," he said, "but we've renamed all the points on this line to camouflage our real location."

Our men are great on geographical nomenclature, anyway. Not long ago I visited at Bacarrat a scabes plant which the Red Cross had just put up. They had located it down by a little lake near a river, and the boys called the place "Scratchville-by-the-Sea." The Red Cross plan was providing a new and more effective method of getting rid of the insects which burrow under the skin of the men, producing an irritation which in the common parlance of old days men called the "seven year itch."

As the officer in command looked at the same four hundred men going through the process of getting rid of the pests which put them out of business as effectively as gas or shell, he said: "If we had nothing but Germans to fight in this war, it would soon be over."

A thing that hits you hard is the youth of our men. They appear like lads—clean, athletic lads just out of college. You pass them marching along the white roads, dust covered but cheerful. Their kits are strapped down to combat weight, and your heart fairly stands still with the poignant realization of their youth. Sometimes when they see the American Red Cross sign on the car they give you a cheer, and you go by trying to look as calm and indifferent and joyful as they look. But you can't do it; it's a flare that does not follow a man into maturer years. That's why the young fight while the elders suffer. We now have over here an army which is altogether young. The French and English men look much older. Some of them have grown old with the rigors of the field and trench, but most of them are actually older. Our men look as the European armies looked four years ago when the ranks were filled altogether with young men.

It may be a comfort to mothers at home to realize that the homesickness of the men decreases over here. It isn't that they lose interest in their homes or love for their folks. It's the psychology of time and distance. When a man is on his way over, the wounds of separation are open. For months he's been in a cantonment where everything spoke to him of home and family associations. Communication was easy and frequent; he kept in weekly, sometimes daily, touch with his loved ones. Then came the long journey across the waters, with little to do except think of all he had left behind, and he arrived in France with an inexpressible longing for home.

Here he was plunged into an intense training which engaged him mentally and physically. He soon realized that he was weeks from the possibility of a letter from home. He adjusted his mind to it. He forgot his worries and occasionally awakened to the shocking realization that he hadn't heard from home for six weeks. Sometimes he writes the home communication service of the Red Cross to ask that we find out whether his folks are all right; oftener he asks us to let his folks know that he is all right. When he gets the assurance that we'll do the thing he asks, he goes back to his work with a degree of contentment which makes him a better soldier.

A company commander told me a few days ago that his men suffer from homesickness less over here, after a few weeks of France, than they did in the cantonments at home. "It's of the utmost importance," said he, "for families at home not to write the soldiers of their troubles." If any soldier's family at home is in trouble, the thing for that family to do is to write the home service department of the Red Cross at Washington. There are in the states now some 3,500 local organizations of the Civilian Welfare department of the Red Cross, and these organizations, being distributed over the entire area of the states, can give immediate attention to the needs of any soldier's family.

No family should hesitate to make use of this department. It isn't a charity organization. It is simply an activity of the Red Cross, organized to see that justice is done to every soldier's family.

PAN-AMERICANISM

By David Kinley

ONE question which has been raised by the war is of great importance and interest to the countries of South America. For many years Argentina, Chile, Venezuela, Peru, and other countries have been developed to a considerable extent by foreign capital. The investments of the British, French, and Germans in these countries have aggregated hundreds of millions of dollars. Although the movement of this capital for investment was primarily of economic character, it affects political relations of the South American countries at three points which need careful consideration in order to arrive at a status which will be satisfactory after the war. On these three points the policy of the United States, as determined by President Wilson, is in harmony with that of the rest of America. Indeed we are at war to vindicate the right of national self-determination in the economic as well as in the political sphere.

In the first place, investments by foreigners have in many instances formed a basis of interference by foreign governments in the domestic affairs of South American countries. When the citizen of a foreign country has been dissatisfied with the returns on his investments or has fancied or believed that he was not receiving fair treatment he has appealed to his home government for protection. The response has generally been to send a warship to insure the collection of the debt. This has been humiliating to the countries so threatened. Both the self-respect of these countries and fair play demand that this practice cease in the future. When a citizen of one country invests his capital in another he should do so with the knowledge that the protection to which his capital is entitled is that which is afforded by the laws of the country in which he has made his investment, unless, indeed, he is denied the advantages of that country's courts of justice or obviously maltreated. Then his case becomes a case for diplomatic negotiation.

INVESTMENTS in South American countries have been made a basis of economic penetration, to influence their politics, in still another way. Foreign investors by securing control of pivotal or key industries or businesses have been able sometimes to dictate both local and national policies. Their economic strength has been a source of political strength.

Now our South American friends have been well aware of these attempts on the part of foreigners to secure political dominance through financial strength. So long as the attempts were made by Europeans the South American has not feared them, because he has felt secure in the protection of the Monroe doctrine. But the very danger which he has seen from European investments has led him to be reluctant about encouraging similar American investments. He fears that our capitalists, like the European, will try to control their political destinies if he permits their investments to become too great.

But against the encroachment of political domination by the United States the South Americans would have no protection from the Monroe doctrine. By getting their financial help from Europe and relying on North America to assist them in enforcing the Monroe doctrine when necessary, they have rightly felt that they were in a position peculiarly strong. Therefore, if we are to be of assistance in a large way to the countries of South America by furnishing them capital for their development we must find some way to convince them that our investments will not be followed by an economic penetration that will try to control their politics or legislation. Our capitalists must go there knowing that they will make their investments under the same conditions as the citizens of the countries themselves and will receive the same protection and justice from the laws of those countries. And they must also be assured that if they happen to lose interest or even principal they will not have it collected for them at the point of a cannon.

A THIRD way in which the countries of South America have been influenced to their detriment by foreign economic investments has been through immigration induced thereby, which has failed, as it has in a measure failed in North America, to assimilate with the people of the countries to which they have gone. There should be no German settlements or French or English settlements in any one of these countries in the sense that the "nationals" of any country may go there and, while retaining essentially their foreign nationality, participate in and share the rights and privileges of citizenship. They should become in the full sense sharers in the destiny of their new homes.

One result of the war should be to settle these things. A decision which will enable the countries of South America to draw more largely on North American capital will be of great importance to them after the war because of the probable shortage of European capital for foreign investment. Therefore we want our South American friends to know that we seek neither economic nor political domination or control in their affairs; that we offer our money for investment under their laws and that we ask no undue advantage. We are not obliged to invest there, and if any investor thinks the risk too great he need not go there; but if he does he must do so with his eyes fully open to the fact that he must not expect there any different treatment from what would be accorded a citizen of these countries who made an investment among us.

We must also find some way to prevent, both for them and for ourselves, the perpetration of foreign nationalism among large groups that come to us. The interests of all the Americas in this are identical and they should frame a common policy.

News and Comment of MOTORDOM

Conducted by SHEPPARD BUTLER

The Differential Isn't Yet All It's Cracked Up to Be

BY HIGH SPEED.

THE motor vehicle of today is, comparatively speaking, a highly organized mechanical entity, made up of mechanical units that have been developed to a greater or less condition of perfection.

Many of these mechanical units or systems leave almost nothing to be desired in point of efficiency. Others are only relatively satisfactory and a few of them are so backward in their course of evolution that they might almost be termed barbaric. Such a backward part is the differential.

The simple fact of the matter is that these relatively undeveloped units have served well enough the purpose for which they were installed and the engineers have gone on to something more pressing. However, there is little question that after we have won the war and our sharpened wits are left free for peaceful progress again, these various backward members of the mechanism will be improved past all knowledge.

The function of the differential unit is simply to compensate for necessary differences in the speeds of the rear wheels, under certain conditions of operation. For instance, when a car is turning a corner, the outer wheel must traverse a greater distance than the inner wheel, which in a sense may act as a pivot during this operation. The differential is designed to permit one wheel to turn more rapidly than the other under these circumstances.

The ordinary bevel or spur gear differential is simply a combination of bevel or spur gear so arranged as to allow one wheel to turn independently of the other. This is accomplished by using two axle shafts, one for each wheel, the ends of these shafts being geared indirectly to the driving bevel which in turn is operated by the pinion at the end of the propeller shaft.

Pulling straight ahead and with the wheels on dry ground, both pull equally and there is no differential action, the differential turning as a unit with the driving bevel or ring gear.

So soon as one wheel leaves the ground due to a bump, or as a corner is turned, or one wheel is on slippery ground, the differential comes into action automatically. It then transmits the greater power to the wheel with the least friction.

It often is said that the differential is too efficient because it differentiates for all differences instead of only for some.

The great fault of this ordinary type of differential is the fact that it permits the wheel which is getting the least traction to get the greater part of the power. The commonest illustration of this is the car with one wheel stuck in a mud hole. That wheel tends to slip and the differential allows it to absorb most of the power, with the result that it spins uselessly in the slippery mud and the car stays just where it is.

If the power were distributed equally to both wheels the car would readily climb out of almost any hole it got into, unless, of course, neither wheel could get traction.

Another condition which brings out the inherent failure of the ordinary differential is when the wheels of the car bounce up in the air. In this case the wheel which leaves the ground is permitted to spin at high speed, with the result that when it strikes the earth again the tire receives a scraping blow that is not very different from filing off part of the tire tread.

Further, the present type of differential contributes largely to skidding, that least enjoyable mishap, which sometimes becomes tragedy. When the brakes are applied on a slippery pavement, it is the usual thing for one wheel to hold, while the other revolves. If each wheel had equal power all the time, this tendency would be largely obviated.

Naturally some attempts have been made to improve on the commonly accepted type of differential. It cannot be said that at the present time any of these attempts has met with striking success.

One of the most successful innovations is what is known as the spiral gear differential. This differs from the ordinary differential only in the form of gearing employed. With the spiral differential both wheels get equal power when pulling ahead, yet it allows of differentiation on turns as a result of friction between the spiral gears.

The salient faults of the ordinary differential unit are overcome, but at the present time the spiral gear is in use only on a few trucks in this country, though I believe it has been applied to a few Ford cars with satisfactory results. Later on we shall hear from this form of differential.

Not long ago a form of differential substitute was offered, which embodied a solid rear axle, having a thread cut on each end. Double tapered cone clutches were attached to each end, so that when power was applied to the axle the threads pushed the clutches over to the left or the right, where they gripped a cup on the wheel, thereby transmitting the power. In making a turn the outer wheel was automatically disconnected and ran free.

This idea of permitting the outer wheel to run free has been the basic idea in a number of differential substitutes. In one particular instance two cams were used, being fastened to the solid axle. When the car was running in a straight line these cams pushed rollers against a drum, attached to the driving wheels, thereby locking axle and wheels, insuring equal power to each wheel. But in turning corners the connection between cam and drum was released so that the outer wheel ran perfectly free.

Some builders have even held that the differential was a non-essential. The cycle cars of a few years ago were seldom equipped with a differential. Some racing cars get along without this part.

ANOTHER GAP CLOSED

New Concrete Stretch on Sheridan Road in Winnetka to Be Opened Formally This Week—Some Day It'll Be Like This to Milwaukee.

One more concrete link in Sheridan road has been completed through Winnetka; its formal opening to traffic is scheduled for next Saturday. The new section is a thirty-one foot roadway more than two miles in length, and continues the pavement of Sheridan road to the south limits of Glencoe. Placing of the concrete on the last gap was finished July 10. It's a long way to Milwaukee, the good roads enthusiasts say, but a continuous paved highway along the shore to the Wisconsin metropolis is beginnig to look at least like a possibility.

Would a thermostat stop the overheating of the engine? Mine overheats all the time and the fan seems to work fine, the ignition is all right and the carbon is removed.

L. A. K., Chicago.

A thermostat will not cool your motor. It helps to keep it working at the best temperature. When the engine is hot the thermostat valve is wide open, letting as much water as possible pass. If the water boils the thermostat cannot help matters. Why not find out first if the water circulation is all right? Is the radiator clogged with sediment in the lower tank? How about the mixture, valve timing, excess oil, etc.?

Will you kindly tell me what is meant by piston displacement? I have seen the term used in connection with racing cars and I do not understand it. —G. A. R., Darlington, Wis.

Dispacement refers to the space swept by the pistons during their travel. The piston displacement of an engine is equal to D2x .7854xNxS where D is the bore in inches. S the stroke, and N the number of cylinders.

I find that the insulation on the coils of my Ford magneto is broken in places, but the coils are not in contact with metal. Will the coils short circuit through the oil in the transmission case, or is the oil sufficient of a nonconductor to prevent this?

If coils must be insulated what is the best material to use? Would ordinary insulating tape withstand the hot oil?

How often would a forty ampere storage battery need recharging, using it for headlights only with, say, 21 candle power tungsten lamps?

C. L., Thayer, Ind.

You will not have any trouble from shorting if ordinary oil is used.

You will have difficulty in taping up the bad spots. Either get new coils in place of the bad ones, or cover the bad spots with a thick coating of heavy shellac. In applying the shellac use three coats, permitting each one to dry thoroughly before laying on the next.

The battery would have to be charged, on an average, once in two weeks, but, of course, this would depend entirely on how long the lamps burned each night.

I operate a milk route and I can use a trailer with my Ford runabout. Can I use an ordinary farm wagon for a trailer, or do you think I would better buy one of the regular trailers I see advertised? The roads out my way are not any too good.

A. B. C., Freeport, Ill.

The usual trouble with employing farm wagons as trailers is that the wheels go to pieces at even moderate speed for an automobile. Likewise they donot pull as easily as a regular trailer with ball bearing equipment. If you do not intend to drive at speed the wagon trailer may work out all right. I would not cut off the tongue, as length here helps the motor pull the extra load.

The Test of War

The crucial test of war service is the most rigid test to which a motor truck can be subjected.

In war service a truck must have the vitality to perform its duty against odds—without hesitation—with increased speed—over rough roads—day and night—with absolute certainty. It must be dependable to the last degree.

Selden Trucks have proved equal to the test of War. In France—in England—in Russia—in Army Camps in this country—wherever there has existed a need for positive, efficient, dependable motor haulage—Selden Trucks can point to a long list of accomplishments.

Thousands of business concerns know the economy of Selden Trucks—for they are profiting daily by their use.

By and About the Folks Who Make 'Em and Sell 'Em

JOSEPH H. BOURGON, body engineer of the Studebaker corporation, has been granted patent rights covering the use of a bevel edge around the top of an automobile body. Just what situation this may develop in the automobile world is a matter of some conjecture. The bevel edge design has been in high favor in the newer models of many manufacturers, and should the Studebaker people feel inclined to claim infringement in the courts a merry whirl of lawsuits would seem to be in order. A special Studebaker design, it is explained by the company, incorporated the bevel edge idea more than two years ago, though it did not appear on stock models until last winter.

A special silver anniversary edition of the Haynes Pioneer has been sisued in commemoration of the completion of Elwood Haynes' twenty-fifth year as an automobile builder. It contains a history of the Haynes concern and describes many of the difficulties encountered by the pioneer in the early days when folks had nothing but cuss words for the horseless carriages of the time.

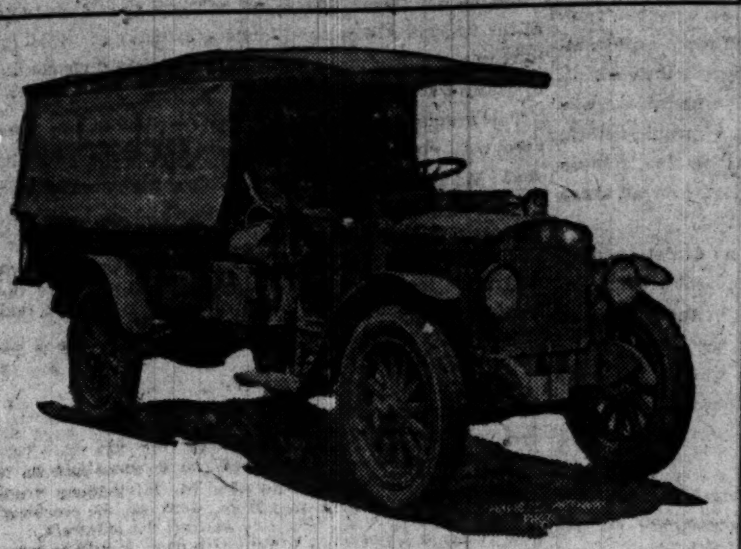
Now it's the Stanley steam truck. The Stanley Engineering company, a new corporation, has obtained the rights to the patents used in the Stanley passenger car for application to commercial vehicle construction, and has begun the building of three-quarter ton, one and one-half ton and two ton models, the first example of which is to be seen in Chicago at 238 East Illinois street. For the present the work is being done at the Stanley passenger car factory in Newton, Mass., but negotiations are under way for a plant in either Chicago or Detroit.

Nash distributors and dealers throughout the country have been requested to sell Nash trucks only to those customers whose businesses are deemed vital to the winning of the war. The volume of war orders at the Nash factory permits only a small proportion of the truck output to go to commercial buyers.

Despite the wartime uncertainties of the moment, the builders of the National started production on a series of new models last month, in accordance with their custom of eighteen years' standing, but they admit they haven't the faintest idea how many cars they will build. Only minor changes appear in the 1919 National, the most important being the substitution of battery ignition for the magneto on the six cylinder model. The new cars will not be ready for the market until late autumn and will make their formal debut at the automobile shows in January—if any are held.

A diverting test to prove the desirability of using pneumatic tires on trucks in the war zone was staged the other day by officials of the General Tire and Rubber company. An armored truck with pneumatic cord tires was driven back and forth in machine gun fire nineteen times before one of the tires was punctured by a bullet. The tires, it is reported, were hit 100 times by bullets, which glanced off but did not puncture.

A RECORD MAKER



ALL existing records for long distance motor truck performance have been broken by this Maxwell truck, which Ray McNamara has been piloting from San Francisco to New York with a load of army supplies for France. McNamara was due in New York yesterday. He had not arrived when this early section went to press, but was nearly there. Assuming that he is at his destination, he made the 3,400 mile run in less than eighteen days. McNamara says a motorized transcontinental express line is now perfectly feasible.

Lights for Side Cars.

The city council committee on judiciary recommended for passage last week an ordinance requiring lights on the side and rear of motorcycle side cars.

Those Signals.

The suggestion that's been going round proposing a system of arm signals for stops and turns isn't so new, it seems. THE TRIBUNE had it from a San Francisco automobile dealer. Now comes in the mail a copy of the Des Moines (Ia.) traffic code containing this suggestion:

"Don't fail to use the semaphore system: Holding the hand straight out for slowing up or stopping; higher than the shoulder for turn to the right; lower than the shoulder for turn to the left."

The Des Moines leaflet is dated July 16, 1917. Did anybody think of it before that? Maybe Noah started it.

Western Routes Mapped.

The important motor routes from Chicago and the surrounding territory to Colorado Springs and the Pike's peak region are shown on a new map just published by the Colorado Springs Chamber of Commerce. Copies may be had on application to A. W. Henderson, secretary of the organization, at Colorado Springs.

News and Comment of MOTORDOM Conducted by SHEPPARD BUTLER

Solons Expect Change in Tax on Car Owners

HOW IT WORKS

On the basis of prices listed Jan. 1, 1918, for five passenger touring cars or their equivalent, the federal license tax on some representative makes, as adopted by the house ways and means committee, would be:

Buick 4	$ 20	Marmon	$ 80
Buick 6	30	Maxwell	15
Cadillac	80	Overland 4	20
Chandler	40	Overland 6	30
Chevrolet	15	Packard	100
Dodge	20	Pierce-Arrow	140
Ford	10	Reo	20
Franklin	50	Simplex-Crane	340
Hudson	40	Studebaker 4	20
Locomobile	160	Studebaker 6	30

REPORTS from Detroit and Washington, following on the heels of last week's announcement of automobile tax schedules by the house ways and means committee, have it that motorists needn't be getting ready to "dig" just yet.

That substantial taxes are to be paid by both car owners and manufacturers when the new war revenue bill becomes a law is a foregone conclusion, of course. But, in the opinion of some persons who may be presumed to know, the suggestions of the ways and means committee are by no means to be taken as final.

According to Representative Frank E. Doremus of Detroit, there is a possibility that the schedule may be changed even in the house committee. "I have been talking with as many congressmen as I could get hold of," said Mr. Doremus. "Many of them say the bill will have a hard row to hoe. Nothing is to be accepted as settled as it stands."

Already members of the senate committee on finance are authority for the statement that the federal license tax must be greatly modified before it will be accepted by that body. As the tax is framed, it calls for a payment of approximately $10 per $500 on the original retail price of cars which cost up to $2,000, and $20 per $500 above that figure.

Objection to its provisions seems to lie not so much in the amount of the imposts as in the fact that nothing but the original listed price is considered. The age of the car makes no difference.

Thus, a car which cost $4,200 ten years ago, but which in its depreciated condition was bought by some one recently for $500, would be taked $120. Its owner, who could just about afford a $500 car, would have to pay the same license fee as the owner of a brand new $4,200 car.

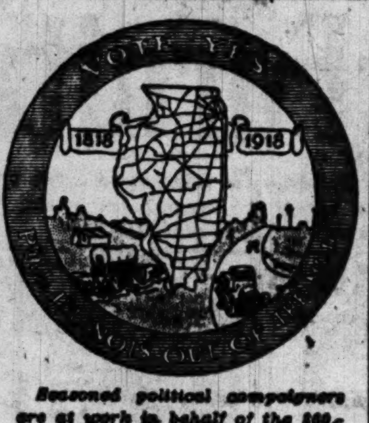
In other words, he would be paying a 24 per cent tax on actual selling value, whereas the owner of a new car would pay only 2.8 per cent. The tax, say the objectors, hits hardest the comparatively poor man — the buyer and user of old cars.

In Illinois the average return on the federal tax as it stands would be approximately twice the average state license fee. According to the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, the average selling price of American cars for the last three years has been between $600 and $720. That would indicate an average federal license payment of about $15—the low priced cars, of course, being greatly in the majority—as against an average state license fee payment in Illinois of about $7.50.

With their present total of about 350,000 cars, therefore, Illinois owners would pay the government a total of approximately $5,250,000 a year.

THEN AND NOW

Historical Contrast, in Tabloid, Makes Good Roads Argument on Campaign Button.



Seasoned political campaigners are at work in behalf of the $60,000,000 good roads bond issue, which Illinois voters will be asked to authorize at the November election, and they're using all the traditional devices to keep folks reminded of the issue. Here's the campaign button, which is beginning to appear among downstate motorists and will be used in Chicago later on. No opportunity is being overlooked to emphasize the desirability of making possible a systematic plan of pulling Illinois out of the mud after the war is over and the necessary labor is available.

Brazil Buying Again.

The Brazilian automobile market is reviving, according to a report from Vice-Consul Richard P. Momsen, Rio de Janeiro. In 1917 the imports of cars were greater than during 1914, 1915 and 1916 combined, although they were only slightly more than half the imports in 1913. In that year France furnished more than 25 per cent of the automobiles imported into Brazil, with the United States second and Germany third. Since the war the cars imported have been almost exclusively American. Out of a total of 1,648 imported in 1917, 1,547 were manufactured in the United States.

Fewer Tires Urged.

A 50 per cent cut in the production of pneumatic tires in August and September, as compared with the same months last year, was asked of the rubber industry last week in a letter from George N. Peek, commissioner of finished products of the war industries board, read before 400 members of the trade at a meeting in New York. This restriction would be exclusive of government business.

All About How to Drive and Steer and Everything!

A MOTORING authority in Denver, having nothing better to do, propounded a series of technical questions the other day to a group of feminine drivers. He says the results were amazing. No affidavit accompanies his report, but he's supposed to be a person of unquestioned veracity.

Here are his questions and some of the answers he says he got:

Q.—If your brakes failed to work going down hill, what would you do? A.—I would jump out and throw a rock under the wheels.

Q.—Which side of a car going in the same direction must you pass? A.—Always pass on the safest side.

Q.—If your engine stalled on a car track, what would you do? A.—Telephone my husband to come and fix it.

Q.—When the car is standing which side should be next to the curbing? A.—The side nearest the sidewalk.

Q.—What precaution should be taken in backing your car? A.—Reverse the engine.

Q.—What is the accelerator? A.—A thing that has something to do with something inside the car, when you step on it, or something.

Q.—When the batteries run out what must you do? A.—Run after them or get new ones.

Q.—Why must you keep grease and oil off the wheels? A.—Because it gets your hands and clothes dirty.

Q.—What is the office of the spark plug? A.—The office of the spark plug is the office where it is made or sold.

Q.—How far must you stop from a fire hydrant? A.—Far enough not to scratch the varnish.

Q.—If your engine stalls going up a hill, what do you do? A.—Try to start it.

Q.—What would you do if the steering gear broke? A.—Drive to the nearest garage and have the man fix it.

Q.—What is the speed limit in the city? In the country? A.—Not over forty miles an hour in the city. Slower in the country, because the roads are bad.

Yesterdays.

Says the Chevrolet Review:

In 1899 automobiles were excluded from the public streets of Boston from 10:30 in the morning until 9 o'clock in the evening.

The first automobile club was started in Chicago in 1895.

The first damage suit in which the alleged offender was a motor car was tried in Rochester, N. Y., in 1899. The plaintiff declared that the motor car owned and driven by the defendant had spoiled the disposition of his horse.

Ford Plants Close.

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 3.—C. L. Gould, manager of the Ford assembling plant here, received orders from Detroit yesterday to close the plant, because of inability to get material. Gould said fifteen plants have been closed for the same reason and that only six now are in operation. Ford production has dropped from 3,100 cars a day to 750, of which 400 are trucks.

Willard STORAGE BATTERY SERVICE STATION

Don't Guess—Be Sure

Guessing at battery conditions is like guessing whether there's oil in your crank case.

If you guess wrong you may have to call for help and pay for repairs.

And you can't always guess right. You ought to know that your battery is charged—that it has plenty of water—that you're not working it beyond its strength.

There's no guessing around a Willard service station. We know.

If your battery isn't up to the scratch we'll tell you why.

If you want to know more about batteries ask us for the booklet, "A Mark with a Meaning for You."

Executives and Managers.

A SALES AND ADVERTISING MANAGER OF FIFTEEN YEARS' EXPERIENCE IS DESIROUS OF MAKING ANOTHER CONNECTION OFFERING GREATER POSSIBILITIES.

Am now and have been for past four years sales manager of the largest specialty machine concern in its field in the world. Am giving satisfactory results but want a bigger opportunity. The indorsement of the president of a prior connection reads: "He is a man who can and will grow larger; who can carefully choose the units of a national sales organization that will move irresistibly forward, who whips into line the laggards, both by the strength of his personality and his ability to project that personality into inspiring letters. These things, coupled with his ability to conceive and put through, to a successful conclusion, a direct advertising campaign, that goes hand in glove with the work of his field organization, spell satisfactory results for all concerned. We would not let him get away from us if we could tell how soon we would get under way, after rebuilding our plant recently destroyed by fire. If you are looking for an indefatigable worker, one who gets results by setting the pace for others to follow, you've found him." A personal interview should assist you in determining whether I am the man you and your organization need. When will it be convenient to you for me to call? Address M 484, Tribune.

Secretary and Treasurer.

I want to connect with a substantial, established, money making concern, where an interest in the business can be acquired by payment of a few thousand dollars down, the balance to be paid from earnings.

I have had several years' experience as secretary and treasurer of a manufacturing concern doing a country wide business; have a good all around knowledge of accounting, a thorough knowledge of credit and collection work, write forceful, result getting letters, and am in every way qualified to take a responsible part in the conduct of a large business. Credentials of unusual weight testify to my character, ability, and faithfulness.

If there is an out of the ordinary opportunity in your organization for a man thus qualified, address M 396, Tribune.

Hundreds of live direct Chicago inquiries. Do not call unless you are a proven success. 551 Peoples Gas Bldg. MR. JACOBS.

AN OPPORTUNITY.
We have several openings for strictly high grade, thoroughly experienced salesmen to handle one of the best stock issues now being offered in the city of Chicago. The company is a well known, old established firm, allied with the steel industry, and is third on the list of essentials. The stock has passed the blue sky requirements, also requirements of the capital issues committee. Men who have sold strictly high grade securities or other high grade salesmen who have sold insurance, books, advertising, or specialties can make some big money in the next few months on this proposition, and make a permanent connection with an old established investment house. Live leads, every assistance, liberal commission, but absolutely no advances. State age and particulars of past experience. Address M J 472, Tribune.

ANOTHER MAN
Wanted who is big enough to interview business men on a proposition that is placed on approval. $50 to $100 per week if your mentality is right; unusual opportunity for men who can locate in other large cities. R. 1124, 202 S. State-st.

ARE YOU A SALESMAN?
If so, a large corporation has opening for three salesmen for city and road work. We are not looking for the professional job hunter, as this is a permanent position, and it will pay in the neighborhood of $150 per week and traveling expenses to the man that makes good. We are interested in men that can work Chicago and vicinity for the present. Call for Mr. Howe, 590 Old Colony Bldg., Monday promptly at 10:30 or 2:30.

ATTENTION—
We require the services of high class automobile accessory men to handle a nationally advertised product of unusual merits exclusively or as a side line. Liberal compensation to real business getters and a splendid opportunity for advancement. Write us for interview, giving references in first letter. All communications treated strictly confidential. SERVICE FOR YOU.

As the world's leading distributor of high grade help, we were called upon during the past week to fill openings with some of the nation's best employers—and we did it. A Chief Inspector, Production Superintendent, General Superintendent, and Employment Manager at salaries over $4,000 a year were just four out of the hundred-odd positions we filled.

That's real service—the kind YOU want working on YOUR case. Surely, if we can connect such men with worth while positions, we can do the same for YOU.

600 REAL JOBS.

Look over what our Departments offer—there is an opportunity for YOU, no matter what your experience may be.

EXECUTIVES.

This Department has found THE places for some of Chicago's big men—and NOW has propositions big enough to interest most any Executive. A few:

Sales Mgr. [Canada]	$ 7,000
Motor Mdse. Mgr.	20,000
Purchasing Agt.	3,000

And 20 others in Executive, Sales Managing, Advertising, Employment, and other lines.

ACCOUNTING.

Our Accounting Department, handling Accountants of all kinds, Bookkeepers, Ledgermen, and other higher office help, can place NOW exactly 170 high grade men in positions paying from $1,200 to $3,600 per year.

SALES.

There's always a good proposition in this Department for live-wire Salesmen, men who have produced results. Right NOW we have orders for 30 high grade men who can sell tires, street railway material, notions, bakers' specialties, soaps, and other commodities.

TECHNICAL.

Here's a Department that his filled some of the biggest Technical positions in the country and it NOW has some just as good waiting THE Men. A few:

Factory Manager	$4,000
Master Mech. [Canning Equip. exp.]	3,000
6 Foremen	$1,800- 3,000

Besides, we have 142 orders for all kinds of Technical help—Superintendents, Inspectors, Engineers [Construction, Refrigeration, Stationary, Production, Power Plant], Construction and Material Men, Timestudy Men, Stockkeepers, Draftsmen and Designers of all kinds, Chemists and other workers in Mechanical lines.

CLERICAL.

The best jobs we've ever offered; 20 Stenographers, $1,000 to $1,500; 4 Railroad Clerks, $900 to $1,500; 4 Correspondents, $1,000 to $1,400; 9 Stock Clerks, $15 to $28; 4 Timekeepers, $120; 12 Shipping Clerks, $85 to $120; 4 Bank Clerks, $75 to $125; 10 Bill Clerks, $18 to $25; 3 Typists, $20 to $25; 110 General Clerks, $75 to $125.

In considering these openings, remember this, Mr. Opportunity-Seeker—it costs YOU nothing to talk them over and one of them may be the means to YOUR greatest success.

Strike while the iron is hot!

PROPER POSITIONS WITH PROPER PROSPECTS!

It is always an easy thing to secure an ordinary garden variety job. But what of the firm you get with and your prospects of advancing as time goes by? Are you satisfied to book up with a firm where you will hold the same old job year after year and waste valuable years of your life before you discover your mistake? Maybe you have already made some such mistake. If so be sure you don't repeat. We are employment experts and through years of experience with the employment situation we KNOW the firms that treat their employees fairly and our clientele is composed of THESE FIRMS ONLY. The result is obvious. Any connection you make through us will be with a high class, reliable firm that will treat you square. That is what you want, a position with a future. It will not cost you one cent to talk this over with us and may result in your obtaining the position that will result in the success to which you are entitled.

SEE US TOMORROW WITHOUT FAIL.

We are not listing the positions we have open as they are entirely too numerous, but will classify them under the general headings of

EXECUTIVE DEPT.
$2,400 to $6,000.
ACCOUNTING DEPT.
$1,000 to $5,000
CLERICAL DEPT.
$15.00 to $30.00.
MISC. DEPT.
SHIPPING, STOCK, ETC.
$15.00 to $25.00.

Remember we have ten times as many positions open as we have men to fill them, so you can certainly find what you want.

TO YOUNG WOMEN HAVING NO PREVIOUS BUSINESS EXPERIENCE.

We have one of the most attractive working opportunities in Chicago to offer young women between the ages of 20 and 25.

The work is not difficult. We give you plenty of time to learn about our business. You can make at the start $10 a week, and very shortly you can make as much as $20 a week if you improve in your effort.

Applicants must write a good, plain hand, speak clearly and impressively, hear well over the telephone, be neat in appearance, come from good family, and have high school or equivalent education. A certain amount of native aggressiveness to accomplish results is a desirable qualification.

Young women who have gone to private schools and who have never worked before will find ours a splendid place to work, a department exclusively for women, plenty of light, air, and the association of other refined young ladies. The business institution which this advertisement represents is thoroughly reliable and one that you would be pleased to work for.

In your application give details of age, schooling, address, and phone number. Address M B 118, Tribune.

WOMAN'S OPPORTUNITY IN BUSINESS.

Never before has the woman had such a chance to succeed in the business field. The mere fact that we have satisfactorily placed more women in the last two months than in any other like period in our history is evidence enough for the opportunities of the present time.

Strike while the iron is hot—go after YOUR position in the wonderful list of over 700 openings we NOW have for women of all kinds of experience.

NOW is YOUR time—take advantage of it by looking into these splendid opportunities.

TAKE YOUR CHOICE.

The Department placing Executives, Sales, and General Clerical help offers these positions: Saleswomen, $25 and expenses; Solicitors, $25; Order Takers, $18; Policy Writers, $75; Correspondents, $18; and 150 other good openings as General Office Clerks, Timekeepers, Filing Clerks, etc., with excellent chances, especially for mature women.

The Department placing Secretaries, Stenographers, Dictaphone Operators, Typists can place more than 1,000 trained women at the present time in positions paying up to $125 per month.

Our Bookkeeping Department has more than 100 openings for Bookkeepers, Combination Bookkeepers-Cashiers, and Ledger Clerks. These positions pay as high as $30 per week.

In our Office Devices Department there are a couple hundred openings for Operators of Multigraphs, Switchboards, Comptometers, Addressographs, and Billing Machines; salaries ranging from $12-$20 per week.

Get into YOUR proper place—help business behind the War. Let us show YOU a real chance in one of these positions.

But do it NOW.

Our Placing Women—all trained experts in employment work—will be glad to help YOU with YOUR problem.

Call on us the first thing TOMORROW.

PROPER POSITIONS WITH PROPER PROSPECTS!

It is always an easy thing to secure an ordinary garden variety job. But what of the firm you get with and your prospects of advancing as time goes by? Are you satisfied to hook up with a firm where you will hold the same old job year after year and waste valuable years of your life before you discover your mistake? Maybe you have already made some such mistake. If so, be sure you don't repeat. We are employment experts, and through years of experience with the employment situation we KNOW the firms that treat their employes fairly and our clientele is composed of THESE FIRMS only. The result is obvious: any connection you make through us will be a high class, reliable firm that will treat you square. That is what you want, a position with a future. It will not cost one cent to talk this over with us and may result in your obtaining the position that will result in success to which you are entitled.

SEE US TOMORROW WITHOUT FAIL.

—We are not listing the positions we have open, as they are entirely too numerous, but will classify them under the general headings of:

STENOGRAPHIC DEPT.
$15 TO $30.
Wonderful openings in this dept.
BOOKKEEPING DEPT.
$15 TO $25.
CLERICAL DEPT.
$10 TO $20.

Remember, we have ten times as many positions open as we have applicants to fill them, so you can certainly find what you want.

WHEAT!

This is the most favorable time to buy wheat land in the Northwest, and the Davidson District is the most favorable place. The high price for wheat, oats, and barley is having its effect on land values, and when we market our 1918 crop, which promises to be a bumper, land prices are going to jump.

Our proposition is ideal for actual settlers, but nonresidents can own a farm under our plan and we will look after your farming interests. People of moderate means can get a start toward independence. You know that the farmer is getting high prices for everything, and you can increase your income materially by farming yourself.

Don't kick about high prices for food. Get busy and produce some yourself. A card will bring, by mail, full information with a book of fine views of farming in Western Canada.

Fortunes Can Be Made Raising Live Stock in Florida.

Blooded stock is Florida's greatest need. Those who now take advantage of this situation should reap wonderful profits.

Many experts agree that Florida is destined to become one of our greatest meat producing states. Corn, sugar cane and stock foods can be grown in abundance.

We have a number of excellent tracts in Hillsboro county, near Tampa, the metropolis of Florida, especially adapted to live stock and farming. Splendid climate. Best location in state. Good transportation. Excellent markets. Tracts from 80 to 2,500 acres at low wholesale prices to those who can pay one-third to one-half cash. Will give 3 to 5 years' time on balance if desired.

Write for a map and full particulars.

REAL ESTATE—FARM LANDS.

Michigan.

UNCLE SAM

says give me more wheat, corn, oats, clover, beans, potatoes, fruit, cattle and hogs to feed my armies. More men are continually being called. The draft age will soon be raised, which means still more consumers and less producers. High prices will prevail for years to come. These conditions present to the wage earner the greatest opportunity he ever had. If he would only open his eyes and see the signs on every hand that mean independence, comfort, health and even luxury for himself and family, he would start seeking for a farm at once and not quit until he finds one. There is not a single good reason why you cannot become a farm owner right now under our plan.

THE CROPS mentioned above and many others grow abundantly on our hardwood lands in Kalkaska and Antrim counties, Michigan. They are sold in 10, 20, 40, 60, 80 or larger tracts for only $15 to $30 per acre. Our terms are within the reach of the farm renter and wage earner; in fact, so easy that any one wanting a farm can buy.

WE SUPPLY YOU with expert farm advisers free, also insurance while you are paying for your land. No taxes to settlers first five years. Railroad fare applied on purchase. The best equipped concern in the world to help put you on a farm of your own and get you nicely started.

NOW IS THE TIME to see the land. The crops are at their best. Write for big free booklet and excursion dates. Offices open every week day, Monday evenings and Saturday afternoons.

10,000 ACRES, CHOICE LEASES, LOCATED in Kentucky and Tennessee; price $7,500; terms $1,500 cash, balance in 12 equal payments monthly. This is a great opportunity for some new oil company to secure a volume of acreage at a fair price and on terms easy to meet, and yet get a block of acreage with great possibilities for development; some of these leases being adjoining proven oil bearing territory and adjoining production. Leases located in Cumberland, Pulaski and Logan counties, Kentucky, and in Pickett, Fentress, Putnam, DeKalb, and Robertson counties, Tennessee. Some of leases in Fentress adjoining proven territory. One lease in Pickett adjoining producing lease. One lease in Salt Lick Bend, Cumberland county, where gushers were drilled about 1902. Full descriptions will be furnished on request. Box 493, Lexington, Kentucky.

WE MANUFACTURE A CARBURETOR FOR Ford cars which is guaranteed to give double the mileage over any other carburetor ever constructed regardless of name, make, or price. Money refunded if fifteen day FREE trial does not prove it. Entirely new principle; simple, plain tube; not a moving part. Guaranteed to start in zero weather without heating or priming. Tremendous demand. Thousands now in use in Chicago territory. Reliable, energetic man who can guarantee sales and carry stock of $500 to $2,000, depending on demand, can secure exclusive territory and will easily net $10,000 this year. No special experience necessary. Will also furnish carburetors for other cars in about sixty days. FRANK A. URWAN, 509 W. Jackson-blvd., Chicago, Ill.

I WANT A HOTEL MAN WITH ABOUT $10,000 cash for a partner in a well established, popular, and attractive summer hotel. The right party will be given full management of the property and will be conveyed an interest in the property. This is a bona fide proposition and will stand the closest investigation. Any person interested ought to make his investigation during August while the season is on. I have not the time to manage the property myself, and desire additional money in the business for the purpose of making extensions and betterments. References will be required and given. Address E J 34, Tribune.

WAR CONDITIONS MAKE CHANGE NECESsary—Have full equipped offices in loop; large storerooms, garage, barn, shed for wagons outside of loop; electric light in buildings, one ton truck; could furnish some reliable help; would like to hear from parties who can use my services and above equipment; salary, commission, partnership, or might buy a small money making business; give line of business and details or don't answer. Address N 231, Tribune.

The Empire

A New and Great Four Cylinder Car Now Ready.

AND IT'S NO BABY.
IT HAS THE SAME MAKE OF MOTOR AS THE WELL KNOWN $4,500 CAR.

THE EMPIRE FOUR IS STANDARDIZED THROUGHOUT, which means that every UNIT in its construction is identically the same as used in a large number of high grade cars. OF COURSE IT IS ASSEMBLED and the "better" it is assembled and the higher grade the "units" are—such as motor, carburetor, clutch, transmission, bearings, and rear axle system, THE BETTER CAR IT IS. Today experienced users of cars inquire: "Who makes this part and who makes that part?" And the better the parts the better the car, all of which means standardization. THE EMPIRE IS, THEREFORE, A STANDARDIZED CAR THROUGHOUT. There is only one type of body to choose from—

Two Pass. Speedster Model.

The body designs are the very latest. The leather is genuine. The paint is smooth and hard. It is a CLASSY CAR in every respect; well made, well finished, powerful, easy running, and noiseless. Size of motor, 3½x5. WE WILL EQUIP A GASOLINE ECONOMIZER GUARANTEED TO SAVE 25 PER CENT OF THE AMOUNT OF GASOLINE ORDINARILY USED WITHOUT CHARGE. The price is just $200 less than a number of four cylinder cars which we do not believe compare with the EMPIRE in size, capacity, style or finish. The price is $1,165 f. o. b. factory, and you will wonder at this low price when you see the car itself. Owing to our extremely low operating expense we will split 50-50 with buyers on the cost of freight and war tax [the war tax is now only 3 per cent]. Call today and inspect this season's "style car," or call us on the phone and ask to have the car shown you.

Co-Op Tires are Rebuilt along scientific lines. They are sturdily made of the very highest grade of black tread rubber and built over the same high grade fabric used in the standard advertised tires selling at 3 or 4 times the price we ask for Co-Op Tires.

From factory to you. This eliminates dealer and jobber profits. Don't make the mistake of your life by overlooking this opportunity. To use Co-Op Tires once is to use them always.

CO-OP TIRES GIVE REAL MILEAGE—NOT ADJUSTED MILEAGE.
CO-OP TIRES WILL HOLD UP WHERE OTHERS FAIL.

CO-OP TIRES ARE BLACK RIBBED TREAD CORD TYPE TIRES.

CENTRAL SECTOR DEAL WITH U. S. WEEK'S FEATURE

Big Cold Storage Plant Will Be Rushed to Completion.

As indicated elsewhere, the deal in the central manufacturing district, in which the trustees of the district have contracted to sell a large plant to the government and to erect for the government on the same one of the largest cold storage warehouses in the country, featured the week's market for outside property. Independent of the magnitude of the transaction, which will, with the land and building, represent an investment of approximately $3,000,000, the transaction has a special interest by reason of the fact that within the last year there have been erected in this section of the district buildings representing a total investment of over $10,000,000, including this cold storage plant.

The land in question comprises 154,000 square feet in Thirty-ninth street, opposite McKinley park, between Hoyne and Seeley avenues, with a frontage of 303 feet on Thirty-ninth street.

Six Story Building.

The main building will be six stories high, 223x323 feet ground dimensions. Connected with it will be a machinery and ice plant, 140x140 feet, having two floors and basement; also a long train shed, in which cars may be iced, and adequate shipping platforms, all under roof. The total floor area of buildings, platforms, and train shed will be about 570,000 square feet.

The Chicago Junction road will serve the plant, which, it is said, will be one of the largest of its kind in the country. To protect the government, the trustees have contracted to purchase the land and buildings at the close of the war at a price to be fixed by appraisal.

The plant, it is said, will be operated by Col. A. D. Kniskern, United States depot quartermaster at Chicago. Work has been started. The negotiations were in charge of H. E. Poronto, representing the trustees, the legal details being attended to by Frederick G. Hack.

Rush the Work.

The preliminary work of construction has begun, and it is planned to rush the building to completion within six months. The work of construction will be under the supervision of the construction division of the government, Col. D. H. Sawyer being the general supervising quartermaster, represented in Chicago by Maj. B. L. Nelson, Capt. O. C. Waterman, and S. F. Forbes. Gardner & Lindberg of Chicago will act as consulting engineers for the government. Capt. L. R. Phillips of the construction division has been assigned to the work as expert in the equipment of the building. Plans for the building were prepared by Scott Joy, district architect, Henschien & McLaren acting as engineers for the cold storage equipment. The E. W. Sproul company will handle the general construction part of the work for the trustees.

Another Deal.

There was filed for record the sale by the United Breweries company to Jacob Neuburger, president of the Silver Manufacturing company, of the property at the southeast corner of Racine avenue and Thirty-fourth place, 126x291 feet, for a stated consideration of $43,000, according to the stamps on the deed. The improvements comprise several buildings of three, four, and five stories at one time occupied for brewery purposes but not used for several years.

Leases and Loans.

While there were not many leases of building space reported in the downtown district, those closed were of an unusually interesting character, in most instances. The most important, of course, was the big one to the Chinese syndicate covering the building at the southwest corner of Wabash avenue and Van Buren street, the details of which are given elsewhere.

In another important one E. F. Keebler & Co. leased for the Otis Elevator company to the Independent Pneumatic Tool company the entire sixth floor in the Otis Elevator building at the northwest corner of Jackson boulevard and Jefferson street. The lease runs from ten years from Aug. 1 at a term rental of $102,000.

The entire floor, which contains 12,000 net square feet, will be occupied by the lessee company for their general offices. About $25,000 will be expended in remodeling and furnishings. The company, which is a $3,000,000 corporation is, now located at 1307 Michigan avenue, which biulding will be sublet by Keebler & Co. J. D. Hurley, a brother of E. N. Hurley, chairman of the United States Shipping board, is president.

John W. and Harvey E. Grace have leased to the Fairbanks company the five story and basement building at 64 East Lake street, between Wabash and Michigan avenue, 25x150 feet, for a term from Oct. 1 next, at a term rental of $30,000. The building has been vacant about two years. The lessee will expend about $2,000 in alterations and improvements. J. D. Kirk & Co., who were the brokers, have leased for the Fairbanks company its present quarters in the Great Lakes building, southwest corner Lake and Market streets, the store and basement, to the McMaster-Carr company for a term rental of $16,000 from Oct. 1 next. It is the fifth lease on Lake street these brokers have closed in the last three months at a total rental of $232,000.

There was filed for record the lease by Alexander Newton to Harry Lubliner and Jacob Trinz of the theater in the new building at 1548-68 Devon avenue for a term of ten years, Oct. 1, 1918, at a stated term rental of $117,640.

The Chicago Title and Trust company is trustee in a loan of $60,000 three and a half years at 5 per cent to George F. and Archibald J. F. McBean, secured by the fee in the 25⅛x90 feet at 27-29 South Clark street, just leased for ninety-nine years to the Morrison Hotel company.

John S. Hodgson Jr. has given a trust deed to J. Soffel to secure a loan of $85,000, seven years, at 6 per cent, secured by the property at the northeast corner of Wisconsin avenue and Pleasant street, Oak Park, 168x122 feet, with business improvements.

Buys Property Held by One Family 71 Years

A transaction of much interest by reason of the fact the title to the property has been in the family of the sellers for seventy-one years, was reported in the sale by W. D. Kerfoot & Co. for Alline P. Woodworth of Rome, Italy, and the estate of Frances C. Adams of New York City to Isaac Marblestone of Chicago, of the property on the south side of Van Buren street, east of Halsted street, adjoining on the east the right of way of the Metropolitan elevated road, which crosses Van Buren street at this point.

The lot is 73x101 feet, forty-eight feet of which is improved with a three story and basement building containing stores and flats. A nominal consideration is given, but $29.50 worth of stamps on the deed indicates that $29,500 was paid for the property. The board of review valued the property at $46,500. The property was acquired from Russell M. Nevine in 1848, who previously had obtained title from the executors of the estate of Elijah K. Hubbard.

Immanuel Woman's Home Association Buys House

Record was made of the purchase by Immanuel Woman's Home association from Lawrence A. Fleming of the property in North La Salle street, 278 feet south of Germania place, lot 29x152 feet, west front, improved with a fourteen room three story house, for a stated consideration of $13,500. It gives the association three houses with a total of about fifty rooms. The association, which began its labors eleven years ago, provides homes for working girls.

Record Made of $21,500 Property Transfer

Record was made of the transfer by Anna K. Knisely to Charles Stein of the property at the northeast corner of Wells street and Twenty-eighth place, 206x125 feet, and 147x125 feet, east front, in Wentworth avenue, 103 feet north of Twenty-eight place, for an indicated consideration of $21,500, according to the stamps on the deed.

REALTY DEALS OUTSIDE LOOP SHOW ACTIVITY

Business Property at Several Points Changes Hands.

Outside business property made a fairly good showing in the week's business.

A noteworthy transaction in Thirty-first street store and flat property, made a matter of record, was the sale by Albert F. Marthe to Garabed T. Pushman of the property at the northwest corner of Michigan avenue, for an indicated consideration of $85,000, subject to an incumbrance of $45,000. The lot is 96x100 feet. It is improved with a three story building containing five stores, five offices, and fourteen flats of five rooms, with a gross annual rental of about $10,000.

The purchaser conveyed in exchange for the equity the property at the northwest corner of Kimball and Leland avenues, lot 198x125 feet, improved with a garage covering 100 feet of the frontage. Newton B. Lauren & Co. represented the seller and W. A. Pridmore the purchaser.

Oak Park Deal.

The property at 1009-11 West Madison street, Oak Park, lot 50x150 feet, improved with a building containing two stores, apartments, and two garages, has been sold by John McGregor to Henry Mohle of Grand Rapids, Wis., for a reported consideration of $32,500, subject to an incumbrance of $7,500, the purchaser conveying in exchange an improved farm of 337 acres in Wood county, Wis., with stock and equipments. George W. Stewart was the broker.

There was filed for record the sale by Henry E. Hobbs to Carrie West of the property in Seventy-first street, 282 feet west of Princeton avenue, lot 100 feet, south front, by 275 feet by 20 feet on the north, improved with a three story building containing four stores and eight flats, with a coal yard in the rear. The property sold for an indicated consideration of $28,000, subject to an incumbrance of $18,000.

$28,000 Transfer.

Record was made of the transfer by Josephine M. Saveen to Julius Alexander and wife of the property in West Van Buren street 113 feet east of Springfield avenue, lot 50x124 feet, north front, with store and flat improvements, for an indicated consideration of $28,000, subject to an incumbrance of $13,000.

The property at the northeast corner of Clark and Argyle streets, lot 91x65 feet, with business improvements, has been transferred by David M. Kurz to Barbara Blessius for an indicated consideration of $23,000, subject to an incumbrance of $16,000.

William H. Hess has sold to Meta Drews the business property at 3613-15 Lawrence avenue, lot 50x125 feet, north front, between Central Park and Monticello avenues, improved with a building containing two stores and four flats, for a reported consideration of $25,000, the purchaser conveying in part payment the three flat building on 30x125 feet of ground at 4827 Winthrop avenue at a valuation of $12,000. G. A. Boersta & Co. were the brokers.

Three Deals in Residence Property Announced

In a north shore deal made a matter of record Frank W. Coolidge, by conservator, has conveyed to George M. Spangler the property in Sheridan road, Kenilworth, 1,086 feet southeast of Kenilworth avenue, lot 103 feet, west front, extending back to the lake, improved with an attractive ten room white frame colonial dwelling with garage in the rear for a stated consideration of $29,000. Mrs. E. R. Stone of Hill & Stone was the broker.

The ten room high grade brick bungalow on 60x125 feet of ground at the southeast corner of Bernard and Ainslie avenues has been sold by John T. Wheeler to George L. Owens for a reported consideration of $16,000. C. F. Adams of J. R. Williams & Co., represented both parties.

Amelia Ryan has purchased from Mary Bronestad the property in Washington boulevard, 195 feet east of Mayfield avenue, lot 36x150 feet, north front, with residence improvements, for an indicated consideration of $20,000, subject to an incumbrance of $9,000.

County's Largest Warranty Deed Filed—$7,357,000

There was filed for record in the office of the county recorder during the week a warranty deed by which the Iroquois Iron company transferred its equities in properties formerly held in its name to the Steel and Tube Company of America. There was a nominal consideration mentioned, but revenue stamps amounting to $7,357 were attached, indicating a transfer value of $7,357,000. This is the largest warranty deed ever filed in the county and the number of stamps attached established a record. The transfer marks the final ceremony in the merging of the Mark Manufacturing company and the Iroquois Iron company into the Steel and Tube Company of America.

A trust deed was filed for record later for $50,000,000, the Continental and Commercial Trust and Savings bank being trustee. Of this amount $5,000,000 matures in twenty-five years and bears 7 per cent interest.

Double Trade Reported in Store and Flat Property

Morris Hirsch has sold to Frank E. and Anna Rusch the property at the northeast corner of Irving Park boulevard and Hamlin avenue, 33x125 feet, with store and flat improvements, for an indicated consideration of $22,000, subject to an incumbrance of $14,000; also the store and flat property at the northeast corner of Armitage and Kenneth avenues, 58x125 feet, for a reported $16,000, subject to $8,000. The grantors in turn conveyed the vacant 83x125 feet at the southeast corner of Lawrence and Spaulding avenues for an indicated $20,000, subject to $6,000. G. A. Boersta & Co. were the brokers.

ATTEMPTS TO ATTACK WOMAN.

A well dressed man who went to the home of Mrs. Dorothy Leiner, 4862 Kenmore avenue, Friday night on the pretense of renting a room, is being sought by the police. Mrs. Leiner says he attempted to strike her with a piece of pipe.

THREE BIG DEALS MARK THE WEEK'S REALTY MARKET

Hotel Purchase and Two Large Leases Are Features.

There was a distinct reminder of the boom market of a few years ago in last week's real estate market, which developed a surprising amount of activity in the way of important transactions, more so than during any previous week for a long time past. This was especially true as regards the downtown district, which has been in a semi-moribund condition for a long time.

It turned up three highly important transactions—the purchase by the Congress Hotel company at Wabash avenue and Harrison street, completing the acquirement of the site for a $1,500,000 addition to the hotel; a long term ground lease by the Morrison hotel on Clark street, and the twenty-five year lease of the property at Wabash avenue and Van Buren street by the Art institute to a Chinese syndicate.

The outside market was featured by the deal in which the trustees of the Central Manufacturing district have contracted to sell to the United States government a large tract of land on Thirty-ninth street, opposite McKinley park, and to erect for the government a large cold storage plant, which together with the land will, it is said, represent an investment of approximately $3,000,000. These were supplemented by a number of good sized transactions, thus making the market of a truly eventful character.

Congress Hotel Purchase.

The Congress Hotel company's purchase comprised the 40x172 feet with four story building at the northeast corner of Wabash avenue and Harrison street, which was acquired from John Q. Adams for $300,000, which is at the rate of $7,500 a front foot, and $43.45 a square foot. The board of review valuation was $273,987, in which the building figured at $20,000. The transaction was negotiated by Albert L. Strauss, representing the hotel company, and Noble B. Judah of Judah, Willard, Wolf & Reichmann, representing Mr. Adams. Simeon Straus attended to the legal details for the hotel company. It is announced that on this and the 40 feet adjoining on the north, the hotel company will erect an addition fronting on Wabash avenue, to cost $1,500,000. It is stated that construction will begin immediately after the close of the war, or sooner if conditions are favorable.

A notable feature of the proposed building will be a great banquet hall with a seating capacity of 3,500. There also will be a roof garden of the most modern type, which will be served by a number of large elevators. In addition there will be apartments with kitchenettes. It is estimated the building will add about 600 rooms to the hotel, giving a total of nearly 2,000 rooms. It is planned to make the foundations and walls strong enough to carry twenty-one stories, although under the present building ordinances, it cannot be higher than sixteen stories above the street level.

Trust Deed Given.

In connection with the transaction the hotel company has given a deed to John Q. Adams securing a purchase money mortgage of $250,00 five years at 6 per cent.

The present Congress hotel occupies a frontage of 373 feet on Michigan avenue, of which the hotel company owns 135 feet in fee simple, holding the rest under long term ground lease.

The Morrison Hotel company, Harry Moir president, has leased from George F. and Archibald J. F. McBean of Highland Park the ground at 27-29 South Clark street, 198 feet south of Madison street, 25⅛x90 feet, west front, for ninety-nine years from Jan. 1, 1919, at a net annual rental of $8,000 for the first ten years and $10,000 for the remaining eighty-nine years, or a total term rental of $970,000. Capitalizing the rental for the first ten years on a 4 per cent basis gives a leasing value of $200,000, which is at the rate of about $7,843 a front foot and $87.14 a square foot. The improvements comprise a four story and basement building, the upper floors of which are now occupied by the hotel company as quarters for its employés.

Improvements Planned.

With the lease just closed the Morrison Hotel company controls under long term lease a frontage of 224 feet on Madison street and 270 on Clark street, which it is planned eventually to improve with a building similar to the one now occupying the corner of the two streets.

E. F. Keebler & Co. represented Mr. Moir, while the law firm of Montgomery, Hart & Smith represented the McBeans. It is said that Mr. Keebler has nother negotiations on in this immediate vicinity in the interest of the hotel company which promise to be closed in the near future. The board of review valued the property leased at $165,528, of which $2,000 is in the improvements.

The lease by the Art institute to the Chinese syndicate headed by Chin Kung Fong and Chan Pak Sun covers the property at the southwest corner of Wabash avenue and Van Buren streets, 80 feet on Wabash avenue by 125⅛ feet on Van Buren street, improved with a two story and basement building, leased to various tenants. The lease runs for a term of twenty-five years from May 1 next at a term rental, including taxes and insurance, of over $1,000,000.

Plan Fine Restaurant.

It is the purpose of the leasing syndicate to raise the height of the ceiling of the second floor to twenty feet and remodel the entire floor at a cost of approximately $100,000, converting the same into one of the finest Chinese restaurants in the country. E. F. Keebler & Co., representing the syndicate, and Hall & Ellis, representing the Art institute, were the brokers. John P. Wilson Jr. of Wilson, Moore & McIlvaine attended to the legal details for the institute, and P. H. O'Donnell for the syndicate.

There are eight stores in the building which will be sublet by Keebler & Co. This is the second million dollar lease recently closed by [illegible]
